T O

The first publication of this Epistle.

THIS paper is a sort of bill of complaint, begun many years since, and drawn up by snatches, as the several occasions offered. I had no thoughts of publishing it, till it pleased some Persons of Rank and Fortune [the Authors of Verse<sup>s</sup> to the Imitator of Horace, and of an Epistle to a Doctor of Divinity from a Nobleman at Hampton Court] to attack, in a very extraordinary manner, not only my Writings (of which, being public, the Public is judge) but my Person, Morals, and Family, whereof, to those who know me not, a truer information may be requisite. Being divided between the necessity to say something of myself, and my own laziness to undertake so awkward a task, I thought it the shortest way to put the last hand to this Epistle. If it have any thing pleasing, it will be that by which I am most desirous to please, the Truth and the Sentiment; and if any thing offensive, it will be only to those I am least sorry to offend, the vicious or the ungenerous.

Many will know their own pictures in it, there being not a circumstance but what is true; but I have, for the most part, spared their Names, and they may escape being laughed at, if they please.

I would have some of them know, it was owing to the request of the learned and candid Friend to whom it is inscribed, that I make not as free use of theirs as they have done of mine. However, I shall have this advantage, and honour, on my side, that whereas, by their proceeding, any abuse may be directed at any man, no injury can possibly be done by mine, since a nameless Character can never be found out, but by its truth and likeness. Dr. ARBUTHNOT.

An Apology for himself and his Writings.

Ep. to Dr. Arbuthnot.] AT the time of publishing this Epistle; the Poet's patience was quite exhausted by the endless impertinence of Poetasters of all ranks and conditions; as well those who courted his favour, as those who envied his reputation. So that now he had resolved to quit his hands of both together, by the publication of a DUNCIAD. This design he communicated to his excellent Friend Dr. ARBUTHNOT, who, although as a Man of Wit and Learning he might not have been displeas'd to see their common injuries revenged on this pernicious Tribe; yet, as our Author's Friend and Physician; was solicitous of his ease and health; and therefore unwilling he should provoke so large and powerful a party.

Their difference of opinion, in this matter, gives occasion to the following Dialogue. Where, in a natural and familiar detail of all his Provocations, both from flatterers and slanderers, our Author has artfully interwoven an Apology for his moral and poetic Character.

For after having told his case, and humourously applied to his Physician in the manner one would ask for a Receipt to kill Vermin, he strait goes on, in the common Character of Askers of advice, to tell his Doctor that he had already taken his party, and determin'd of his remedy. But using a preamble, and introducing it (in the way of Poets) with a Simile, in which he names Kings, Queens, and Ministers of State, his Friend takes the alarm, begs him to forbear, to stick to his subject, and to be easy under so common a calamity.

To make so light of his disaster provokes the Poet : he breaks the thread of his discourses which was to lead his Friend gently, and by degrees, into his project ; and abruptly tells him the application of his Simile, at once,

Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass, &c.

But recollecting the humanity and tenderness of his Friend, which, he apprehends, might be a little shocked at the apparent severity of such a proceeding, he assures him, that his good-nature is alarmed without a cause, for that nothing has less feeling than this sort of Offenders ; which he illustrates in the Examples of a damn'd Poet, a detected Slanderer, a Table-Parasite, a Church-Buffoon, and a Party-Writer [from  $\psi$  1 to 100.]

But, in this enumeration, coming again to Names, his Friend once more stops him, and bids him consider what hostilities this general attack will set on foot. So much the better, replies the Poet ; for, considering the strong antipathy of bad to good, enemies they will always be, either open or secret : and it admits of no question, but a Slanderer is less hurtful than a Flatterer. For, says he (in a pleasant Simile addressed to his Friend's profession)

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the flaver kills, and not the bite.

And how abject and excessive the flattery of these creatures was, he shews, by observing, that they praised him even for his infirmities ; his bad health, and his inconvenient shape [ $\psi$  100 to 125.]

But still it might be said, that if he could bear this evil of Authorship no better, he should not have wrote at all. To this he answers, by lamenting the natural bent of his disposition, which, from his very birth, had drawn him so strongly towards Poetry, as if it were in execution of some secret decree of Heaven for crimes unknown. But though he offended in becoming an Author, he offended in nothing else. For his early verses were perfectly innocent and harmless,

Like gentle Fanny's was my flowing theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.

Yet even then, he tells us, two enraged and hungry Critics fell upon him, without any provocation. But this might have been borne, as the common lot of distinction. But it was his peculiar ill-fortune to create a Jealousy in One, whom not only many good offices done by our Author to him and his friends, but a similitude of genius and studies might have inclined to a reciprocal affection and support. On the contrary, that otherwise amiable Person, being, by nature, timorous and suspicious; by education a party-man; and, by the circumstances of fortune, beset with flatterers and pick-thanks; regarded our Author as his Rival, set up by a contrary Faction, with views destructive of public liberty, and his friend's reputation. And all this, with as little provocation from Mr. Pope's conduct in his poetic, as in his civil character.

For though he had got a Name (the reputation of which he agreeably rallies in the description he gives of it) yet he never, even when most in fashion, set up for a Patron, or a Dictator amongst the Wits; but still kept in his usual privacy; leaving the whole Castalian state, as he calls it, to a Mock-Mecenas, whom he next describes [y 125 to 261.]

And, struck with the sense of that dignity and felicity inseparable from the character of a true Poet, he breaks out into a passionate vow for a continuance of the full Liberty attendant on it. And to shew how well he deserves it, and how safely he might be trusted with it, he concludes his wish with a description of his temper and disposition [y 261 to 271.]

This naturally leads him to complain of his Friends, when they consider him in no other view than that of an Author: as if he had neither the same right to the enjoyments of life, the same concern for his highest interests, or the same dispositions of benevolence, with other people.

Besides, he now admonishes them, in his turn, that they do not consider to what they expose him, when they urge him to write on; namely, to the suspensions and the displeasure of a Court; who are made to believe, he is always writing; or at least to the foolish criticisms of court sycophants, who pretend to find him, by his style, in the immoral libels of every idle scribler: though he, in the mean time, be so far from countenancing such worthless trash in others, that he would be ready to execrate even his own best vein of poetry, if made at the expence of Truth or Innocence.

Curst be the verse, how well so e'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give Virtue scandal, Innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear.

(Sentiments, which no efforts of genius, without the concurrence of the heart, could have expressed in strains so exquisitely sublime) that the sole object of his resentment was vice and baseness. In the detection of which, he artfully takes occasion to speak of that by which he himself had been injured and offended: and concludes with the character of one who had wantonly outraged him, and in the most sensible manner [y 271 to 334.]

And here, moved again with fresh indignation at his slanderers, he takes the advice of Horace, sume superbiam quaesitam meritis, and draws a fine picture of his moral and poetic conduct through life. In which he shews that not fame, but VIRTUE was the constant object of his ambition: that for this he opposed himself to all the violence of Cabals, and the treacheries of Courts: the various iniquities of which having distinctly specified, he sums them up in that most atrocious and sensible of all [y 334 to 359.]

The whisper, that to greatness still too near,
 Perhaps yet vibrates on his SOV'REIGN'S ear.
 Welcome for thee, fair Virtue! all the past:
 For thee, fair Virtue! welcome ev'n the last.

But here again his Friend interrupts the strains of his divine enthusiasm, and desires him to clear up an objection made to his conduct, at Court. "That it was inhumane to insult the Poor, and ill-breeding to affront the Great." To which he replies, That indeed, in his pursuit of Vice, he rarely considered how Knavery was circumstanced; but followed it, with his Vengeance, indifferently, whether it led to the Pillory, or the Drawing-Room [y 359 to 368.]

But lest this should give his Reader the idea of a savage intractable Virtue, which could bear with nothing, and would pardon nothing, he takes to himself the shame of owning that he was of so easy a nature, as to be duped by the slenderest appearances, a pretence to Virtue in a witty Woman: so forgiving, that he had sought out the object of his beneficence in a personal Enemy: so humble, that he had submitted to the conversation of bad Poets: and so forbearing, that he had curbed in his resentment under the most shocking of all calumnies, abuses on his Father and Mother [y 368 to 388.]

This naturally leads him to give a short account of their births, fortunes, and dispositions; which ends with the tenderest wishes for the happiness of his Friend; intermixed with the most pathetic description of that filial Piety, in the exercise of which he makes his own happiness to consist.

Me let the tender office long engage
 To rock the Cradle of reposing Age;
 With lenient arts extend a Mother's breath,
 Make Languor smile, and smooth the bed of Death;
 Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
 And keep a while one Parent from the sky!

And now the Poem, which holds so much of the DRAMA, and opens with all the disorder and vexation that every kind of impertinence and slander could occasion, concludes with the utmost calmness and serenity, in the retired enjoyment of all the tender offices of FRIENDSHIP and PIETY [ŷ 388 to the End.]

P. SHUT, shut the door, good John! fatigu'd
 I said,
 Tye up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead.
 The Dog-star rages! nay 'tis past a doubt,
 All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out:
 Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand, §
 They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

N O T E S.

VER. 1. Shut, shut the door, good John!] John Searl; his old and faithful servant: whom he has remembered, under that character, in his Will.

Shut, shut the Door good John, 'fatiguo' I said
Tye up the Knocker, say I'm sick I'm dead.
Ep. to Arbuthnot.

TO THE SATIRES. 11

What walls can guard me, or what shades can hide?
 They pierce my thickets, thro' my Grot they glide,
 By land, by water, they renew the charge,
 They stop the chariot, and they board the barge. 10
 No place is sacred, not the Church is free,
 Ev'n Sunday shines no Sabbath-day to me:
 Then from the Mint walks forth the Man of rhyme,
 Happy! to catch me, just at Dinner-time.

Is there a Parson, much be-mus'd in beer, 15
 A maudlin Poetess, a rhyming Peer,
 A Clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
 Who pens a Stanza, when he should engross?
 Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
 With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
 All fly to TWIT'NAM, and in humble strain 21
 Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.

VARIATIONS.

After y 20. in the MS.

Is there a Bard in durance? turn them free,
 With all their brandish'd reams they run to me:

NOTES.

VER. 12. Ev'n Sunday shines no Sabbath-day to me.] The beauty of this line arises from the figurative terms of the predicate alluding to the subject. A secret, in elegant expression, which our Author often practised.

VER. 13. Mint.] A place to which insolvent debtors retired, to enjoy an illegal protection, which they were there suffered to afford one another, from the persecution of their creditors.

Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the Laws;
 Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause :
 Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope, 25
 And curses Wit, and Poetry, and Pope.

Friend to my Life ! (which did not you prolong,
 The world had wanted many an idle song)
 What Drop or Nosstrum can this plague remove ?
 Or which must end me a Fool's wrath or love ? 30
 A dire dilemma ! either way I'm sped.
 If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead.
 Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I !
 Who can't be silent, and who will not lye :
 To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace, 35
 And to be grave, exceeds all Pow'r of face.
 I sit with sad civility, I read
 With honest anguish, and an aching head ;

V A R I A T I O N S.

Is there a Prentice, having seen two plays,
 Who would do something in his Sempsters' praise—
 VER. 29. in the first Ed.

Dear Doctor, tell me, is not this a curse ?
 Say, is their anger, or their friendship worse ?

N O T E S.

VER. 23. Arthur,] Arthur Moore, Esq.

VER. 33. Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge,] Alluding to the scene in the Plain-Dealer, where Oldfox gags, and ties down the Widow, to hear his well-pen'd stanzas.

VER. 38. honest anguish,] i. e. undissembled.

Ibid. an aching head ;] Alluding to the disorder he was then so constantly afflicted with.

TO THE SATIRES. 13

And drop at last, but in unwilling ears, 39
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."

Nine years! cries he, who high in Drury-lane,
Lull'd by soft Zephyrs thro' the broken pane,
Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before Term ends,
Oblig'd by hunger, and request of friends:

"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why take it, 45

"I'm all submission, what you'd have it, make it."

Three things another's modest wishes bound,
My Friendship, and a Prologue, and ten pound.

Pitholeon sends to me: "You know his Grace,
"I want a Patron; ask him for a Place." 50

Pitholeon libell'd me—"but here's a letter
"Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no better.

"Dare you refuse him? Curl invites to dine,
"He'll write a Journal, or he'll turn Divine."

VARIATIONS.

VER. 53. in the MS.

If you refuse, he goes, as fates incline,
To plague Sir Robert, or to turn Divine.

NOTES.

VER. 43. Rhymes ere he wakes,] A pleasant allusion to those words of Milton,

Dictates to me slumb'ring, or inspires
Easy my unpremeditated Verse.

VER. 49. Pitholeon] The name taken from a foolish Poet of Rhodes, who pretended much to Greek. Schol. in Horat. l. i. Dr. Bentley pretends. that this Pitholeon libelled Cæsar also. See notes on Hor. Sat. 10. l. i. P.

Bless me! a packet.—“ ’Tis a stranger fues, 55
 “ A Virgin Tragedy, an Orphan Muse.”
 If I dislike it, “ Furies, death and rage !”
 If I approve, “ Commend it to the Stage.”
 There (thank my stars) my whole commission ends,
 The Play’rs and I are, luckily, no friends. 60
 Fir’d that the house reject him, “ ’Sdeath I’ll print it,
 “ And shame the fools—Your int’reft, Sir, with Lintot.”

Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:
 “ Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch.”

All my demurs but double his attacks; 65
 At last he whispers, “ Do; and we go snacks.”
 Glad of a quarrel, strait I clap the door,
 Sir, let me see your works and you no more.

’Tis sung, when Midas’ Ears began to spring,
 (Midas, a sacred person and a King) 70

V A R I A T I O N S .

VER. 60. in the former Edd.

Cibber and I are luckily no friends.

N O T E S .

VER. 69. ’Tis sung, when Midas’ &c.] The Poet means sung by Perfius; and the words alluded to are,

Vidi, vidi ipse, Libelle!

Auriculas Afini Mida Rex habet.

The transition is fine, but obscure: for he has here imitated the manner of that mysterious writer, as well as taken up his image. Our Author had been hitherto complaining of the folly and importunity of indigent Scriblers;

His very Minister who spy'd them first,
 (Some say his Queen) was forc'd to speak, or burst.
 And is not mine, my friend, a forer case,
 When ev'ry coxcomb perks them in my face?
 A. Good friend forbear! you deal in dang'rous things.
 I'd never name Queens, Ministers, or Kings; 76
 Keep close to Ears, and those let asses prick,
 'Tis nothing—P. Nothing? if they bite and kick?
 Out with it, DUNCIAD! let the secret pass,
 That secret to each fool, that he's an Ass: 80
 The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie?)
 The queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel? take it for a rule,
 No creature smarts so little as a fool.
 Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break; 85
 Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack:
 Pit, box, and gall'ry in convulsions hurl'd,
 Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.

NOTES.

he now insinuates he suffered as much of both, from Poetafters of Quality.

VER. 72. Queen] The story is told, by some, of his Barber, but by Chaucer of his Queen. See Wife of Bath's Tale in Dryden's Fables. P.

VER. 80. That secret to each fool, that he's an Ass:] i. e. that his ears (his marks of folly) are visible.

VER. 88. Alluding to Horace,

Si fractus illabatur orbis,
 Impavidum ferient ruinæ.

P.

Who shames a Scribler? break one cobweb thro',
 He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew: 90
 Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again,
 Thron'd in the centre of his thin designs,
 Proud of a vast extent of flimzy lines!
 Whom have I hurt? has Poet yet, or Peer, 95
 Lost the arch'd eye-brow, or Parnassian sneer!
 And has not Colly still his lord, and whore?
 His butchers Henley, his free-masons Moor?
 Does not one table Bavius still admit?
 Still to one Bishop Philips seem a wit? 100
 Still Sappho—A. Hold; for God-fake—you'll offend,
 No Names—be calm—learn prudence of a friend:
 I too could write, and I am twice as tall;
 But foes like these—P. One Flatt'rer's worse than all.

N O T E S.

VER. 92. The creature's at his dirty work again,] This metamorphosing, as it were, the Scribler into a Spider is much more poetical than a comparison would have been. But Poets should be cautious how they employ this figure; for where the likeness is not very striking, instead of giving force, they become obscure. Here, every thing concurs to make them run into one another, They both spin; not from the head [reason] but from the guts [passions and prejudices] and such a thread that can entangle none but creatures weaker than themselves.

VER. 98. free-masons Moor?] He was of this society, and frequently headed their processions.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right, 105

It is the flaver kills, and not the bite.

A fool quite angry is quite innocent :

Alas ! 'tis ten times worfe when they repent.

One dedicates in high heroic prose,
And ridicules beyond a hundred foes : 110

One from all Grubstreet will my fame defend,

And more abusive, calls himself my friend.

This prints my Letters, that expects a bribe,

And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe."

There are, who to my person pay their court: 115

I cough like Horace, and, tho' lean, am short,

Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high,

Such Ovid's nose, and "Sir! you have an Eye—

Go on, obliging creatures, make me see

All that disgrac'd my Betters, met in me. 120

VARIATIONS.

VER. III. in the MS.

For song, for silence some expect a bribe ;

And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe."

Time, praise, or money, is the least they crave ;

Yet each declares the other fool or knave.

NOTES.

VER. 118. Sir, you have an Eye] It is remarkable that amongst these compliments on his infirmities and deformities, he mentions his eye, which was fine, sharp, and piercing. It was done to intimate, that flattery was as odious to him when there was some ground for commendation, as when there was none.

Say for my comfort, languishing in bed,
 "Just so immortal Maro held his head:"
 And when I die, be sure you let me know
 Great Homer dy'd three thousand years ago.

Why did I write? what sin to me unknown 125
 Dipt me in ink, my parent's, or my own?
 As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
 I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.

V A R I A T I O N S.

After y 124. in the MS.

But, friend, this shape, which You and Curla admire,
 Came not from Ammon's son, but from my Sire<sup>b</sup>:

And for my head, if you'll the truth excuse,

I had it from my Mother<sup>c</sup>, not the Muse.

Happy, if he, in whom these frailties join'd,

Had heir'd as well the virtues of the mind.

N O T E S.

VER. 127. As yet a child, &c.] He used to say, that he began to write verses further back than he could remember. When he was eight years old, Ogilby's Homer fell in his way, and delighted him extremely; it was followed by Sandys' Ovid; and the raptures these then gave him were so strong, that he spoke of them with pleasure ever after. About ten, being at school at Hide-park-corner, where he was much neglected, and suffered to go to the Comedy with the greater boys, he turned the transactions of the Iliad into a play, made up of a number of speeches from Ogilby's translation, tacked together with verses of his own. He had the address to persuade the upper boys to act it; he even prevailed on the Master's Gardener to

 No duty broke, no father disobey'd. 130

The Muse but serv'd to ease some friend, not Wife,
 To help me thro' this long disease, my Life,
 To second, ARBUTHNOT ! thy Art and Care,
 And teach, the Being you preserv'd, to bear.

But why then publish? Granville the polite, 135
 And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write ;
 Well-natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
 And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays ;

NOTES.

represent Ajax ; and contrived to have all the actors dressed after the pictures in his favourite Ogilby. At twelve he went with his Father into the Forest : and then got first acquainted with the writings of Waller, Spencer, and Dryden ; in the order I have named them. On the first sight of Dryden, he found he had what he wanted. His Poems were never out of his hands ; they became his model ; and from them alone he learnt the whole magic of his versification. This year he began an epic Poem, the same which Bp. Atterbury, long afterwards, persuaded him to burn. Besides this, he wrote, in those early days, a Comedy and Tragedy, the latter taken from a story in the Legend of St. Genevieve. They both deservedly underwent the same fate. As he began his Pastorals soon after, he used to say pleasantly, that he had literally followed the example of Virgil, who tells us, Cum canerem reges et prælia, &c.

VER. 130. no father disobey'd] When Mr. Pope was yet a Child, his Father, though no Poet, would set him to make English verses. He was pretty difficult to please, and would often send the boy back to new turn them. When they were to his mind, he took great pleasure in them, and would say, These are good rhymes.

The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield read,
 Ev'n mitred Rocheſter would nod the head, 140
 And St. John's ſelf (great Dryden's friends before)
 With open arms receiv'd one Poet more.

Happy my ſtudies, when by theſe approv'd !
 Happier their author, when by theſe belov'd !
 From theſe the world will judge of men and books,
 Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks. 146

Soft were my numbers ; who could take offence
 While pure Deſcription held the place of Senſe ?

N O T E S.

VER. 139. Talbot, &c.] All theſe were Patrons or Admirers of Mr. Dryden ; though a ſcandalous libel againſt him, entitled, Dryden's Satyr to his Muſe, has been printed in the name of the Lord Somers, of which he was wholly ignorant.

Theſe are the perſons to whoſe account the Author charges the publication of his firſt pieces : perſons, with whom he was converſant (and he adds beloved) at 16 or 17 years of age ; an early period for ſuch acquaintance. The catalogue might be made yet more illuſtrious, had he not confined it to that time when he writ the Poſtorals and Windsor Foreſt, on which he paſſes a ſort of Censure in the lines following,

While pure Deſcription held the place of Senſe ? &c. P.

VER. 146. Burnets, &c.] Authors of ſecret and ſcandalous Hiſtory.

Ibid. Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.] By no means Authors of the ſame claſs, though the violence of party might hurry them into the ſame miſtakes. But if the firſt offend'd this way, it was only through an honeſt warmth of temper, that allowed too little to an excellent underſtanding. The other two, with very bad heads, had hearts ſtill worſe.

VER. 148. While pure Deſcription held the place of Senſe ?] He uſes pure equivocally, to ſignify either chaſte or empty ;

Like gentle Fanny's was my flow'ry theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream. 150.

and has given in this line what he esteemed the true Character of descriptive poetry, as it is called. A composition, in his opinion, as absurd as a feast made up of sauces. The use of a picturesque imagination is to brighten and adorn good sense ; so that to employ it only in description, is like childrens delighting in a prism for the sake of its gaudy colours ; which when frugally managed, and artfully disposed, might be made to represent and illustrate the noblest objects in nature.

N O T E S.

When in these latter ages, human learning raised its head in the West, and its tail, verbal criticism, was, of course, to rise with it; the madness of Critics soon became so offensive, that the sober stupidity of the monks might appear the more tolerable evil. J. Argyropylus, a mercenary Greek, who came to teach school in Italy, after the sacking of Constantinople by the Turks, used to maintain that Cicero understood neither Philosophy nor Greek: while another of his Countrymen, J. Lascaris by name, threatened to demonstrate that Virgil was no Poet. Countenanced by such great examples, a French Critic afterwards undertook to prove that Aristotle did not understand Greek, nor Titus Livius, Latin. It was the same discernment of spirit, which has since discovered that Josephus was ignorant of Hebrew; and Erasmus so pitiful a Linguist, that, Burman assures us, were he now alive, he would not deserve to be put at the head of a country school. For though time has strip'd the present race of Pedants of all the real accomplishments of their predecessors, it has conveyed down this spirit to them, unimpaired; it being found much easier to ape their manners, than to imitate their science. However, those earlier Rivalds raised an appetite for the Greek language in the West: infomuch, that Hermolaus Barbarus, a passionate admirer of it, and a noted Critic, used to boast, that he had invoked and raised the Devil, and puzzled him into the bargain, about the meaning of the Aristotelian ENTELEXIA. Another, whom Balzac speaks of, was as eminent for his Revelations: and was wont to say, that the meaning of such or such a verse, in Persius, no one knew but God and himself. While the celebrated Pomponius Lætus, in excess of Veneration for Antiquity, became a real Pagan, raised altars to Romulus, and sacrificed to the Gods of Latium: in which he was followed by our countryman, Baxter, in every thing, but in the expence of his sacrifices.

But if the Greeks cried down Cicero, the Italian Critics knew how to support his credit. Every one has heard of the childish excesses into which the ambition of being thought Ciceronians carried the most celebrated Italians of this time. They abstained from reading the Scriptures for fear of spoiling their style: Cardinal Bembo used to call the Epistles of St. Paul by the contemptuous name of Epistolaccias, great over-grown Epistles. But ERASMUS cured their frenzy in that masterpiece of good sense, his Ciceronianus. For which (in the way Lunatics treat their Physicians) the elder Scaliger insulted him with all the brutal fury peculiar to his family and profession.

His son Joseph, and Salmasius had indeed such endowments of nature and art, as might have raised modern learning to a rivalship with the ancient. Yet how did they and their adversaries tare and worry one another? The choicest of Joseph's flowers of speech were, Stercus Diaboli, and Lutum stercore maceratum. It is true, these were lavished upon his enemies: for his friends he had other things in store. In a letter to Thuanus, speaking of two of them, Clavius and Lipsius, he calls the first a monster of ignorance; and the other, a slave to the Jesuits, and an Idiot. But so great was his love of sacred amity at the same time, that he says, I still keep up my correspondence with him, notwithstanding his Idiocy, for it is my principle to be constant in my friendships—Je ne cesse de luy escrire, nonobstant son Idioterie, d'autant que je suis constant en amitié. The character he gives of his own Chronology, in the same letter, is no less extraordinary: Vous vous pouvez assurer que nostre Eusebe sera un trésor des merveilles de la doctrine Chronologique. But this modest account of his own work, is nothing in comparison of the idea the Father gives his Bookseller of his own Person. Who, when he was preparing something of Julius Scaliger's for the Press, desired the Author would give him directions concerning his Picture, which was to be set before the book. Whose answer (as it stands in his collection of Letters) is, that if the engraver could collect together the several graces of Massinissa, Xenophon, and Plato, he might then be enabled to give the public some faint and imperfect resemblance of his Person. Nor was Salmasius's judgment of his own parts less favourable to himself; as Mr. Colomies tells the story. This Critic, on a time, meeting two of his brethren, Mess. Gaulman and Mauffac, in the Royal Library at Paris, Gaulmin, in a virtuous consciousness of their Importance, told the other two, that he believed, they three could make head against all the learned in Europe: To which the great Salmasius fiercely replied, "Do you and

 " M. Mauffac join yourselves to all that are learned in the " world, and you shall find that I alone am a match for
 " you all."

Vossius tells us, that when Laur. Valla had snarl'd at every name of the first order in antiquity, such as Aristotle, Cicero, and one whom I should have thought this Critic the likeliest to spare, the redoubtable PRISCIAN, he impiously boasted that he had arms even against Christ himself. But Codrus Urcaus went further, and actually used those arms the other only threatned with. This man while he was preparing some trifling piece of Criticism for the press, had the misfortune to hear his papers were destroyed by fire: On which he is reported to have broke out—"Quodnam ego tantum
 " scelus concepi, O Christe! quem ego tuorum unquam

 " quæ tibi mentis compos, et ex animo dicam. Si forte,

VER. 193. But were there One whose fires &c.] Our Poet's friendship with Mr. Addison began in the year 1713. It was cultivated, on both sides, with all the marks of mutual esteem and affection, and constant intercourse of good offices. Mr. Addison was always commending moderation, warned his friend against a blind attachment to party, and blamed Steele for his indiscreet zeal. The translation of the Iliad being now on foot, he recommended it to the public, and joined with the Tories in pushing the subscription; but at the same time advised Mr. Pope not to be content with the applause of one half of the nation. On the other hand, Mr. Pope made his friend's Interest his own (see note on ψ 215. i Ep. B. ii. of Hor.) and, when Dennis so brutally attacked the Tragedy of Cato, he wrote the piece called A narrative of his madness.

Thus things continued till Mr. Pope's growing reputation, and superior genius in Poetry gave umbrage to his friend's false delicacy : and then it was he encouraged Philips and others (see his Letters) in their clamours against him as a Tory and Jacobite, who had assisted in writing the Examiners ; and, under an affected care for the government, would have hid, even from himself, the true grounds of his disgust. But his jealousy soon broke out, and discovered itself, first to Mr. Pope, and, not long after, to all the world. The Rape of the Lock had been written in a very hasty manner, and printed in a collection of Miscellanies. The success it met with encouraged the Author to revise and enlarge it, and give it a more important air, which was done by advancing it into a mock-epic Poem. In order to this it was to have its Machinery ; which, by the happiest invention, he took from the Rosycrusian System. Full of this noble conception, he communicated it to Mr. Addison, who he imagined would have been equally delighted with the improvement. On the contrary, he had the mortification to have his friend receive it coldly ; and more, to advise him against any alteration ; for that the poem in its original state was a delicious little thing, and, as he expressed it, merum sal. Mr. Pope was shocked for his friend ; and then first began to open his eyes to his Character.

Soon after this, a translation of the first book of the Iliad appeared under the name of Mr. Tickell ; which coming out at a critical juncture, when Mr. Pope was in the midst of his engagements on the same subject, and by a creature of Mr. Addison's, made him suspect this to be another shaft from the same quiver : And after a diligent enquiry, and laying many odd circumstances together, he was fully convinced that it was not only published with Mr.

Addison's participation, but was indeed his own performance. Mr. Pope, in his first resentment of this usage, was resolved to expose this new Version in a severe critique upon it. I have now by me the Copy he had marked for this purpose ; in which he has classed the several faults in translation, language, and numbers, under their proper heads. But the growing splendor of his own work so eclipsed the faint efforts of this opposition, that he trusted to its own weakness and malignity for the justice due to it. About this time, Mr. Addison's son-in-law, the E. of Warwick, told Mr. Pope, that it was in vain to think of being well with his Father who was naturally a jealous man ; that Mr. Pope's superior talents in poetry had hurt him, and to such a degree, that he had underhand encouraged Gildon to write a thing about Wycherley, in which he had scurrilously abused Mr. Pope and his family ; and for this service he had given Gildon ten Guineas, after the pamphlet was printed. The very next day Mr. Pope, in a great heat, wrote Mr. Addison a Letter, wherein he told him, he was no stranger to his behaviour ; which, however, he should not imitate : But that what he thought faulty in him, he would tell him fairly to his face ; and what deserved praise he would not deny him to the world : and, as a proof of this disposition towards him, he had sent him the inclosed, which was the Character, first published separately, and afterwards inserted in this place of the Epist. to Dr. Arbuthnot. This plain dealing had no ill effect. Mr. Addison treated Mr. Pope with civility, and, as Mr. Pope believed, with justice, from this time to his death, which happened about three years after.

Atterbury so well understood the force of them, that in one of his letters to Mr. Pope he says, " Since you now know where your Strength lies; I hope you will not suffer that talent to lie unemployed." He did not; and, by that means, brought satiric Poetry to its perfection.

VER. 282. When ev'ry Coxcomb knows me by my Style ?] The discovery of a concealed author by his Style, not only requires a perfect intimacy with his writings, but great skill in the nature of composition. But, in the practice of these Critics, knowing an author by his style, is like judging of a man's whole person from the view of one of his moles.

When Mr. Pope wrote the Advertisement to the first Edition of the new Dunciad, intimating, that “it was by a different hand from the other, and found in detached pieces, “incorrect and unfinished,” I objected to him the affectation of using so unpromising an attempt to mislead his Reader. He replied, that I thought too highly of the public taste; that, most commonly, it was formed on that of half a dozen people in fashion, who took the lead, and who sometimes have obtruded on the Town the dullest performances, for works of Wit: while, at the same time, some true effort of genius, without name or recommendation, hath passed by the public eye unobserved or neglected: That he once before made the trial I now objected to, with success, in the Essay on Man: which was at first given (as he told me) to Dr. Younge, to Dr. Desaguliers, to Lord Bolingbroke, to Lord Pagett, and, in short, to every body but to him who was capable of writing it. However, to make him amends, this same Public, when let into the secret, would, for some time after, suffer no poem, with a moral title, to pass for any one's but his. So the Essay on human Life, the Essay on Reason, and many others of a worse tendency, were very liberally bestowed upon him.

This, and a great deal more he added on the same occasion, and assured me, that his new Dunciad would be full as well understood. He was not mistaken. This fourth book, the most studied and highly finished of all his Poems, was esteemed obscure (a name, which, in excess of modesty, the Reader gives to what he does not understand) and but a faint imitation, by some common hand, of the other three. He had, himself, the malicious pleasure to hear this judgment passed on his favourite work by several of his Acquaintance; a pleasure more to his taste than the flatteries they used to entertain him with, and were then intentionally paying him. Of which he gave me another instance, that afforded him much diversion. While these acquaintance read the Essay on Man as the work of an unknown author, they fairly owned they did not understand it: but when the reputation of the poem became secured by the knowledge of the Writer, it soon grew so clear and intelligible, that, on the appearance of the Comment on it, they told him, they wondered the Editor should think a large and minute interpretation necessary.

But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
 Insults fall'n worth, or Beauty in distress,
 Who loves a Lye, lame slander helps about,
 Who writes a Libel, or who copies out : 290
 That Fop, whose pride affects a patron's name,
 Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame :
 Who can your merit selfishly approve,
 And show the sense of it without the love ;
 Who has the vanity to call you friend, 295
 Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend ;
 Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,
 And, if he lye not, must at least betray :

VER. 293.—selfishly approve,] Because to deny, or pretend not to see, a well established merit, would impeach his own heart or understanding.

VER. 294. And show the sense of it without the love ;] i. e. will never suffer the admiration of an excellence to produce any esteem for him, to whom it belongs.

VER. 295. Who has the vanity to call you friend, Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend ;] When a great Genius, whose writings have afforded the world much pleasure and instruction, happens to be enviously attacked, or falsely accused, it is natural to think, that a sense of gratitude for so agreeable an obligation, or a sense of that honour resulting to our Country from such a Writer, should raise amongst those who call themselves his friends, a pretty general indignation. But ev'ry day's experience shews us the very contrary. Some take a malignant satisfaction in the attack ; others a foolish pleasure in a literary conflict ; and the far greater part look on with a selfish indifference.

 But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

Satire or sense, alas ! can Sporus feel ?

Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel ?

P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
 This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings ;
 Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys, 311
 Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys ;

So well-bred spaniels civilly delight

In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray, 315

As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.

Whether in florid impotence he speaks,

And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks ;

VER. 299. Who to the Dean, and silver bell &c.] Meaning the man who would have persuaded the Duke of Chandos that Mr. P. meant him in those circumstances ridiculed in the Epistle on Taste. See Mr. Pope's Letter to the Earl of Burlington concerning this matter.

NOTES.

VER. 340. That not in Fancy's maze he wander'd long,] His merit in this will appear very great, if we consider, that in this walk he had all the advantages which the most poetic Imagination could give to a great Genius. M. Voltaire, in a MS. letter now before me, writes thus from England to a friend in Paris. "I intend to send you two or three poems of Mr. Pope, the best poet of England, and at present of all the world. I hope you are acquainted enough with the English tongue, to be sensible of all the charms of his works. For my part, I look upon his poem called the Essay on Criticism as superior to the Art of poetry of Horace; and his Rape of the Locke is, in my opinion, above the Lutrin of Despreaux. I never saw so amiable an imagination, so gentle graces, so great variety, so much wit, and so refined knowledge of the world, as in this little performance." MS. Let. Oct. 15, 1726.

VER. 341. But stoop'd to Truth, and moraliz'd his song :] This may be said no less, in commendation of his literary, than of his moral character. And his superior excellence in poetry is owing to it. He soon discovered in what his force lay; and he made the best of that advantage, by a sedulous cultivation of his proper talent. For having read Quintilian early, this precept did not escape him, Sunt hæc duo vitanda prorsus: unum ne tentes quod effici non possit; alterum, ne ab eo, quod quis optime facit, in aliud, cui minus est idoneus, transferas. It was in this knowledge and cultivation of his genius that he had principally the advantage of his great master, Dryden; who, by his Mac-Flecno, his Absolom and Achitophel, but chiefly by his Prologues

The damning critic, half approving wit,
 The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit ; 345

VER. 356. The whisper, that to greatness still too near,] By the whisper is meant calumniating honest Characters. Shakespear has finely expressed this office of the sycophant of greatness in the following line:

Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear.

By which is meant the immolating men's reputations to the vice or vanity of his Patron.

VER. 357. Perhaps, yet vibrates] What force and elegance of expression! which, in one word, conveys to us the physical effects of sound, and the moral effects of an often repeated scandal.

VER. 359. For thee, fair Virtue! welcome ev'n the last!] This line is remarkable for presenting us with the most amiable image of steady Virtue, mixed with a modest concern for his being forced to undergo the severest proofs of his love for it, which was the being thought hardly of by his SOVEREIGN.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,

VER. 378. Let Budgel] Budgel, in a weekly pamphlet called the Bee, bestowed much abuse on him, in the imagination that he writ some things about the Last Will of Dr. Tindal, in the Grubstreet Journal; a Paper wherein he never had the least hand, direction, or supervisal, nor the least knowledge of its Author. P.

VER. 379. except his Will;) Alluding to Tindall's Will: by which, and other indirect practices, Budgell, to the exclusion of the next heir, a nephew, got to himself almost the whole fortune of a man entirely unrelated to him.

VER. 381. His father, mother, &c.] In some of Curl's and other pamphlets, Mr. Pope's father was said to be a Mechanic, a Hatter, a Farmer, nay a Bankrupt. But, what is stranger, a Nobleman (if such a reflection could be thought to come from a Nobleman) had dropt an allusion to that pitiful untruth, in a paper called an Epistle to a Doctor of Divinity: And the following line,

Hard as thy Heart, and as thy Birth obscure, had fallen from a like Courtly pen, in certain Verses to the Imitator of Horace. Mr. Pope's Father was of a Gentleman's Family in Oxfordshire, the head of which was the Earl of Downe, whose sole Heiress married the Earl of Lindsey—His mother was the daughter of William Turnor, Esq. of York: She had three brothers, one of whom was killed, another died in the service of King Charles; the eldest following his fortunes, and becoming a general officer in Spain, left her what estate remained after the sequestrations and forfeitures of her family—

Yet why? that Father held it for a rule,
 It was a sin to call our neighbour fool:
 That harmless Mother thought no wife a whore:

VER. 390. A. What fortune, pray?] His friend's personating the Town in this place, and assuming its impertinent curiosity, gives great spirit to the ridicule of the question.—Julian has a parallel stroke, in his sarcastic discourse to the people of Antioch, where he tells them a story out of Plutarch, concerning Cato; who, when he came near their City, found their youth under arms, and the magistrates in their robes of Office. On which alighting,

Born to no Pride, inheriting no Strife, in an ill humour with his friends, who he imagined had informed them of his approach, the ceremonies came up, and, advancing before the company, accosted him in this manner ; " Stranger, how far off is Demetrius ?" Now this Demetrius (says Julian) was one of Pompey's freedmen, and immensely rich. You will ask me what he was worth ; for I know nothing so likely to excite your curiosity. Why, truly, for this, you must consult Demophilus the Bythinian, whose anecdotes turn chiefly upon subjects of this high importance.

O grant me, thus to live, and thus to die ! 404

Who sprung from Kings shall know less joy than I.

O Friend ! may each domestic bliss be thine !

Be no unpleasing Melancholy mine :

Me, let the tender office long engage,

To rock the cradle of reposing Age,

With lenient arts extend a Mother's breath, 410

Make Languor smile, and smooth the bed of Death,

Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,

And keep a while one parent from the sky !

On' cares like these if length of days attend,

May Heav'n, to bless those days, preserve my friend,

THE Occasion of publishing these Imitations was the Clamour raised on some of my Epistles. An Answer from Horace was both more full, and of more Dignity, than any I could have made in my own person; and the Example of much greater Freedom in so eminent a Divine as Dr. Donne, seemed a proof with what indignation and contempt a Christian may treat Vice or Folly, in ever so low, or ever so high a Station. Both these Authors were acceptable to the Princes and Ministers under whom they lived. The Satires of Dr. Donne I versified, at the desire of the Earl of Oxford while he was Lord Treasurer, and of the Duke of Shrewsbury who had been Secretary of State; neither of whom looked upon a Satire on Vicious Courts as any Reflection on those they served in. And indeed there is not in the world a greater error, than that which Fools are so apt to fall into, and Knaves with good reason to encourage, the mistaking a Satirist for a Libeller; whereas to a true Satirist nothing is so odious as a Libeller, for the same reason as to a man truly virtuous nothing is so hateful as a Hypocrite.

H O R A C E
I M I T A T E D.

WHOEVER expects a Paraphrase of Horace, or a faithful Copy of his genius, or manner of writing, in these IMITATIONS, will be much disappointed. Our Author uses the Roman Poet for little more than his canvas: And if the old design or colouring chance to suit his purpose, it is well: if not, he employs his own, without scruple or ceremony. Hence it is, he is so frequently serious where Horace is in jest; and at ease where Horace is disturbed. In a word, he regulates his movements no further on his Original, than was necessary for his concurrence, in promoting their common plan of Reformation of manners.

Had it been his purpose merely to paraphrase an ancient Satirist he had hardly made choice of Horace; with whom, as a Poet, he held little in common besides a comprehensive knowledge of life and manners, and a certain curious felicity of expression, which consists in using the simplest language with dignity, and the most ornamented, with ease. For the rest, his harmony and strength of numbers, his force and splendor of colouring, his gravity and sublime of sentiment, would have rather led him to another model. Nor was his temper less unlike that of Horace, than his talents. What Horace would only smile at, Mr. Pope would treat with the grave severity of Persius: And what Mr. Pope would strike with the caustic lightening of Juvenal, Horace would content himself in turning into ridicule.

If it be asked then, why he took any body at all to imitate, he has informed us in his Advertisement. To which we may add, that this sort of Imitations, which are of the nature of Parodies, adds reflected grace and splendor on original wit. Besides, he deem'd it more modest to give the name of Imitations to his Satires, than, like Despreaux, to give the name of Satires to Imitations.

VER. 3. Scarce to wise Peter—Chartres] It has been commonly observed of the English, that a Rogue never goes to the Gallows without the pity of the Spectators, and their parting curses on the rigour of the Laws that brought him thither : and this has been as commonly ascribed to the good nature of the people. But it is a mistake. The true cause is their hatred and envy of power. Their compassion for Dunces and Scoundrels (when exposed by great writers to public contempt, either in justice to the age, or in vindication of their own Characters) has the same source. They cover their envy to a superior genius, in lamenting the severity of his Pen.

Locke, in answer to this observation, replies, I find, with pleasure, a strange Harmony throughout, between your Thoughts and mine. Just so a Roman Lawyer, and a Greek Historian, thought of the poetry of Cicero. ## NOTES.

VER. 64. Verse-man or Prose-man, term me which you will, Papist or Protestant, &c.] The original thought (which is very flat, and so ill and awkwardly expressed, as to be taken for a monkish Addition) is here admirably imitated, in a lively character of himself, and his Writings.

VER. 69. Satire's my Weapon,] In these Words, our Author has happily explained the true Character of Horace's ironical Apology, which is to this purpose: Nature, says he, has given all Creatures the means of offence and defence: The wolf has teeth, the bull has horns, and I have a talent for satire. And, at the same time that he vindicates his claim to this his natural weapon, Satire, he shews its moral use; it was to oppose to the noxious qualities which nature had given Cervius for informing, Canidia for poisoning; and Turius for passing sentence. The turn of this ludicrous argumentation is fine and delicate; and we find his Imitator saw the whole force of it.

NOTES.

VER. 93.—96. Whether Old age—shade] The Original is more finished, and even sublime. Besides, the last verse—To wrap me in the universal shade, has a languor and redundancy unusual with our author.

VER. 97. Whether the darken'd room—Or whiten'd wall—] This is only a wanton joke upon the terms of his Original Quisquis erit vitae color.

VER. 99. In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,] The Poet, in our equal Government, might talk of the disasters incident to wit, at his ease, and with all this levity of style. But it was a serious matter with Horace; and is so still with our witty Neighbours; one of whom has well expressed their condition, in the following lines,

Eh! Que fait-on? Un simple badinage,
Mal entendu d'un Prude, ou d'un Sot,
Peut vous jeter sur un autre rivage:
Pour perdre un Sage, il ne faut qu'un Bigot.

 Attends to guild the Ev'ning of my day,
 Or Death's black wing already be display'd, 95
 To wrap me in the universal shade;

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
 Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write:
 In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,
 Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. 100

Alas young man! your days can ne'er be long,
 In flow'r of age you perish for a song!
 Plums and Directors, Shylock and his Wife,
 Will club their Testers, now, to take your life!

P. What? arm'd for Virtue when I point the pen,
 Brand the bold front of shameless guilty men; 106
 Dash the proud Gamester in his gilded Car;
 Bare the mean Heart that lurks beneath a Star;

NOTES.

VER. 104. Will club their Testers, &c.] The image is exceeding humourous, and, at the same time, betrays the injustice of their resentment in the very circumstance of their indulging it; as it shews the Poet had said no more of their avarice, than what was true. Our Author's abundance of Wit has made his readers backward in acknowledging his talent for Humour. But the veins are equally rich; and the one flows with ease, and the other is always placed with propriety.

VER. 105—120. What? arm'd for Virtue, &c.] This is not only superior to Horace, but equal to any thing in himself.

NOTES.

VER. 110. Lights of the Church, or Guardians of the Laws?] Because just Satire is an useful supplement to the sanctions of Law and Religion; and has, therefore, a claim to the protection of those who preside in the administration either of church or state.

VER. 111. Could Boileau—Could Dryden] I believe neither of them would have been suffered to do this, had they not been egregious flatterers of the several Courts to which they belonged.

Ibid. Could pension'd Boileau—Could Laureate Dryden] It was Horace's purpose to compliment the former times, and therefore he gives the virtuous examples of Scipio and Lælius; it was Mr. Pope's, to satirize the present, and therefore he gives the vicious examples of Louis, Charles, and James. Either way the instances are equally pertinent; but in the latter they have rather greater force. Only the line,

Uni æquus virtuti atque ejus amicis, loses something of its spirit in the imitation; for the amici, referred to, were Scipio and Lælius.

VER. 116. Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir, or slave?] Mr. Pope, it is well known, made his fortune by his Homers.

Can there be wanting, to defend Her cause,
 Lights of the Church, or Guardians of the Laws !
 Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain III
 Flatt'ers and Bigots ev'n in Louis' reign ?
 Could Laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
 Yet neither Charles nor James be in a rage ?
 And I not <sup>f</sup> strip the gilding off a Knave, II 5
 Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir, or slave ?
 I will, or perish in the gen'rous cause :
 Hear this, and tremble ! you, who 'scape the Laws.

N O T E S.

Lord Treasurer Oxford affected to discourage that design ; for so great a Genius (he said) ought not to be confined to Translation. He always used Mr. Pope civilly ; and would often express his concern that his religion rendered him incapable of a place. At the same time, he never spoke one word of a pension. For this offer he was solely indebted to the Whig-Ministers. In the beginning of George I. Lord Hallifax, of his own motion, sent for Mr. Pope, and told him it had often given him concern that so great a Poet had never been distinguished ; that he was glad it was now in his power to serve him ; and, if he cared to accept it, he should have a pension not clogged with any engagements. Mr. Pope thanked him, and desired time to consider of it. After three months (having heard nothing further from that Lord) he wrote him a letter to repeat his thanks ; in which he took occasion to mention the affair of the pension with much indifference. So the thing dropt till Mr. Craggs came into the Ministry. The affair of the pension was then resumed. And this minister, in a very frank and friendly manner, told Mr. Pope, that three hundred pounds a year was then at his service : he had the management of the secret-service money, and could pay him such a pension, without its being known, or ever coming to account. But now Mr. Pope declined the offer without hesitation: only, in return for so friendly a proposal, he told the Secretary, that if at any time he wanted money he would draw upon him for 100 or 200 l. which liberty, notwithstanding, he never took. Mr. Craggs more than once pressed him on this head ; and urged the conveniency of a Chariot ; which Mr. Pope was sensible enough of : But the precariousness of that supply made him very prudently decline the thoughts of an equipage ; which it was much better never to set up, than not properly to support.

But grave Epistles, &c.] The legal objection is here more justly and decently taken off than in the Original. Horace evades the force of it with a quibble,

Esto, si quis mala, sed bona si quis.

But the Imitator's grave Epistles shew the satire to be a serious reproof, and therefore justifiable; which the integer ipse of the Original does not: for however this might plead in mitigation of the offence, nothing but their being grave Epistles could justify the attack.

NOTES.

Some Critics tell us, it is want of taste to put this line in the mouth of Trebatius. But our Poet confutes this censure, by shewing how well the sense of it agrees to his Friend's character. The Lawyer is cautious and fearful; but as soon as SIR ROBERT, the Patron both of Law and Gospel,

VER. 79, 80. The Soul subsides, and wickedly inclines—To seem but mortal ev'n in sound Divines.] Horace was an Epicurean, and laughed at the immortality of the soul. He therefore describes that languor of the mind proceeding from intemperance, on the idea, and in the Terms of Plato, affigit humo divinae particulam aerae.

To this his ridicule is pointed. Our Poet, with more sobriety and judgment, has turned the ridicule, from the Doctrine, which he believed, upon those Preachers of it, whose feasts and computations in Taverns did not edify is here admirably paraphrased. And it is observable in these Imitations, that where our Poet keeps to the sentiments of Horace, he rather piques himself in excelling the most finished touches of his Original, than in correcting or improving the more inferior parts. Of this elegance of ambition all his Writings bear such marks, that it gave coun-

He remembered, and hints with just indignation, at those luxurious Patricians of his old party; who, when they had agreed to establish a fund in the cause of Freedom, under the conduct of Brutus, could never be persuaded to

VER. 16. You limp, like Blackmore on a Lord Mayor's horse,] The fame of this heavy Poet, however problematical elsewhere, was universally received in the City of London. His versification is here exactly described : stiff, and not strong ; stately and yet dull, like the sober and slow-paced Animal generally employed to mount the Lord Mayor : and therefore here humourously opposed to Pegasus.

VER. 26. And house with Montagne now, and now with Locke,] i. e. Chuse either an active or a contemplative life, as is most fitted to the season and circumstances.—For he regarded these Writers as the best Schools to form a man for the world ; or to give him a knowledge of himself :

Montagne excelling in his observations on social and civil life; and Locke, in developing the faculties, and explaining the operations of the human mind.

VER. 30. Still true to Virtue—with Aristippus, or St. Paul,] It was the Poet’s purpose in this place to give us the picture of his own mind; not that of Horace’s, who tells us, he sometimes went with Zeno, and sometimes with Aristippus; the extremes of whose different systems Tully thus justly censures: “ Ut quoniam Aristippus, quasi animum nullum habeamus, corpus solum tuetur; Zeno, quasi corporis simus expertes, animum solum complectitur.” But neither truth nor decency would suffer our Poet to say, that, to suit himself to the times, he went into either of these follies. To shew us, therefore, he took no more from the Stoics than their sincerity and warmth for the interests of Virtue, he compares himself to a friend, in whom he observed that warmth. And by joining St. Paul with Aristippus he would insinuate, that he took no more from the Cyrenaic sect than a charitable compliance to occasions, for the benefit of his neighbour. Thus in serving himself of his friend to temper the rigidity of one sect of philosophy, while the Apostle is employed to rectify the looseness of the other, he brings Mr. Lyttelton and St. Paul acquainted ; for those who correct opposite extremes must needs meet ; and so we see the Patriot in a new point of view ; which is, in a virtuous accommodation of himself to seasons and circumstances.

VER. 32. Indulge my candor—Back to my native Moderation side,] An honest and useful insinuation, that though

Sometimes with Aristippus, or St. Paul,
 Indulge my candor, and grow all to all;
 Back to my <sup>p</sup> native Moderation slide,
 And win my way by yielding to the tide.

Long, as to him who works for debt, the day, 35
 Long as the Night to her whose Love's away,
 Long as the Year's dull Circle seems to run,
 When the brisk Minor pants for twenty-one:
 So slow th' <sup>r</sup> unprofitable moments roll,
 That lock up all the Functions of my soul; 40
 That keep me from myself; and still delay
 Life's instant business to a future day:
 That <sup>r</sup> task, which as we follow, or despise,
 The eldest is a fool, the youngest wise.
 Which done, the poorest can no wants endure; 45
 And which not done, the richest must be poor.

NOTES.

Parties in the State prosecute their ends on ever so true principles, and with ever so good intentions, yet opposition is apt to make the most scrupulous Leaders of them sometimes violate both candor and moderation. However, by the expression, of indulging his candor, he would insinuate too, that, when he allowed the least to it, he never violated Truth; and, by sliding back to his native moderation, that he always kept within the Bounds of Reason,—But the general Sense of the whole passage is, that when he went with the Stoics, who advise à public life, the character of his civil virtue was rigid; when he went with the Cyrenaics, who encourage a private, that of his social was indulgent.

NOTES.

VER. 70. Scar'd at the spectre of pale Poverty !] Tho' this has all the spirit, it has not all the imagery of the Original ; where Horace makes Poverty pursue, and keep pace with the Miser in his flight.

Per mare Pauperiem fugiens, per saxa, per ignes.
But what follows,

Wilt thou do nothing, etc.

far surpasses the Original.

VER. 77. Here Wisdom calls : etc.] All from hence to ψ 110, is a pretty close translation : but in general done with so masterly a spirit, that the Original, tho' one of the most finished passages in Horace, looks only like the imitation of it.

 See him, with pains of body, pangs of soul,
 Burn through the Tropic, freeze beneath the Pole !
 Wilt thou do nothing for a nobler end,
 Nothing, to make Philosophy thy friend ?
 To stop thy foolish views, thy long desires, 75
 And <sup>e</sup> ease thy heart of all that it admires ?
<sup>b</sup> Here, Wisdom calls : <sup>i</sup> " Seek Virtue first, be bold !
 " As Gold to Silver, Virtue is to Gold."

NOTES.

haps is the most faulty line in the whole collection. The Original is, which only says, that as Silver is of less value than Gold; so Gold is of less value than Virtue: in which simple inferiority, and not the proportion of it, is implied. For it was as contrary to the Author's purpose, as it is to common sense, to suppose, that Virtue was but just as much better than gold, as gold is better than silver. Yet Mr. Pope, too attentive to his constant object, conciseness, has, before he was aware, fallen into this absurd meaning. However this, and many other inaccuracies in his works, had been corrected, had he lived; as many, that now first appear in this Edition, were actually corrected a little before his death.

Vilius est auro argentum, virtutibus aurum.

And here I cannot but do justice to one of his many good qualities, a very rare one indeed, and what none

Hic murus aheneus esto.

Dacier laughs at an able Critic, who was scandalized; that the antient Scholiasts had not explained what Horace meant by a wall of brass; for, says Dacier, “ Chacun se fait des difficultez à sa mode, et demande des remarques proportionnées à son goût:” he then sets himself in good earnest about this important inquiry; and, by a passage in Vegetius, luckily discovers, that it signified an

NOTES.

VER. 117. Full many a Beast goes in, but none come out.] This expression is used for the joke's sake ; but it hurts his moral ; which is, that they come out beasts. He should here have stuck to the terms of his Original, vestigia omnia te adversum spectantia.

VER. 118. Adieu to Virtue, &c.] These two lines are intended for the application or moral of a fable, which needed no explaining ; so that, they impair the grace of it, at best, inferior to his Original. For Horace speaks of the common people, Populus Romanus, to whom one of Æsop's Fables was properly addressed : but, this is too simple a method of conveying truth to the well-dress'd Rabble of St. James's.

VER. 124. Alike in nothing but one Lust of Gold, Just half the land would buy, and half be sold :] Here the argument suffers a little for the sake of the satire. The reason why the People should not be followed is because

Belua multorum est capitum. nam quid sequar, aut quem ? they are so divers in their pursuits (says Horace) that one cannot follow this man without being condemned by that. The imitator says, they all go on one common principle, the lust of gold. This inaccuracy, tho' Horace has a little of it, yet he has however artfully disguised it, by speaking of the various objects of this one Passion, avarice, as of so many various passions,

“ Because I see, by all the Tracks about,
 “ Full many a Beast goes in, but none come out.
 Adieu to Virtue, if you're once a Slave :
 Send her to Court, you send her to her grave.

Well, if a King's a Lion, at the least
 The <sup>b</sup> People are a many-headed Beast :
 Can they direct what measures to pursue,
 Who know themselves so little what to do ?
 Alike in nothing but one Lust of Gold,
 Just half the land would buy, and half be sold : 125
 Their <sup>c</sup> Country's wealth our mightier Misers drain,
 Or cross, to plunder Provinces, the Main ;

 Some keep Assemblies, and would keep the Stews ;

VER. 3. dear MURRAY,] This Piece is the most finished of all his Imitations, and executed in the high manner the Italian Painters call con amore. By which they mean, the exertion of that principle, which puts the faculties on the stretch, and produces the supreme degree of excellence. For the Poet had all the warmth of affection for the great Lawyer to whom it is addressed: and, indeed, no man ever more deserved to have a Poet for his friend. In the obtaining of which, as neither Vanity, Party, nor Fear, had any share; so he supported his title to it by all the offices of true Friendship.

 There are, my Friend! whose philosophic eyes

 To him commit the hour, the day, the year,
 And view this dreadful All without a fear. 10

sons. But this change being considered as an object of admiration, his imitator has judiciously expressed it in the more sublime figurative terms of Stars that rise and fall,

by whose courses the seasons are marked and distinguished.

VER. 8. trust the Ruler with his skies, To him commit the hour,] Our Author, in these imitations, has been all along careful to correct the loose morals, and absurd divinity of his Original.

VER. 10. And view this dreadfull All without a fear.] He has added this idea to his text; and it greatly heightens the dignity of the whole thought. He gives it the appellation of a dreadful All, because the immensity of God's creation, which modern philosophy has so infinitely enlarged, is apt to affect narrow minds, who measure the divine comprehension by their own, with dreadful suspicions of man's being overlooked in this dark and narrower corner of existence, by a Governor occupied and busied with greater matters.

VER. 21. In either case, believe me, we admire;] i. e. These objects, in either case, affect us, as objects unknown affect the mind, and consequently betray us into false judgments.

 The fear to want them is as weak a thing :
 Whether we dread, or whether we desire, 20
 In either case, believe me, we admire ;
 Whether we <sup>i</sup> joy or grieve, the same the curse,
 Surpriz'd at better, or surpriz'd at worse.
 Thus good or bad, to one extreme betray
 Th' unbalanc'd Mind, and snatch the Man away ; 25
 For <sup>k</sup> Virtue's self may too much zeal be had ;
 The worst of Madmen is a Saint run mad.

NOTES.

VER. 22. Whether we joy or grieve, the same the curse, Surpriz'd at better, or surpriz'd at worse.] The elegance of this is superior to the Original. The curse is the same (says he) whether we joy or grieve. Why so? Because, in either case, the man is surprized, hurried off, and led away captive.

(The good or bad to one extreme betray

Th' unbalanc'd Mind, and snatch the Man away.)

This happy advantage, in the imitation, arises from the ambiguity of the word surprize.

NOTES.

Our Poet, speaking in one place of the purpose of his satire, says,

In this impartial glass, my Muse intends
Fair to expose myself, my foes, my friends.

and, in another, he makes his Court-Adviser say,

Laugh at your Friends, and if your Friends be sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more.

because their impatience under reproof would shew, they had a great deal which wanted to be set right.

On this principle, Swift falls under his correction. He could not bear to see a friend he so much valued, live in the miserable abuse of one of Nature's best gifts, unadmonished of his folly. Swift (as we may see by some posthumous Volumes, lately published, so dishonourable and injurious to his memory) trifled away his old age in a dissertation that women and boys might be ashamed of. For when men have given into a long habit of employing their wit only to shew their parts, to edge their spleen, to pander to a faction; or, in short, to any thing but that for which Nature bestowed it, namely, to recommend, and set off Truth; old age, which abates the passions, will never rectify the abuses they occasioned. But the remains of wit, instead of seeking and recovering their proper channel, will run into that miserable depravity of taste here condemned: and in which Dr. Swift seems to have placed no inconsiderable part of his wisdom. HORACE.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Reflections of Horace, and the Judgments past in his Epistle to Augustus, seem'd so seasonable to the present Times, that I could not help applying them to the use of my own Country. The Author thought them considerable enough to address them to his Prince; whom he paints with all the great and good qualities of a Monarch, upon whom the Romans depended for the Encrease of an Absolute Empire. But to make the Poem entirely English, I was willing to add one or two of those which contribute to the Happiness of a Free People, and are more consistent with the Welfare of our Neighbours.

This Epistle will show the learned World to have fallen into Two mistakes: one, that Augustus was a Patron of Poets in general; whereas he not only prohibited all but the Best Writers to name him, but recommended that Care even to the Civil Magistrate: Admonebat Praetores, ne paterentur Nomen suum obsolesceri, etc. The other, that this Piece was only a general Discourse of Poetry; whereas it was an Apology for the Poets, in order to render Augustus more their Patron. Horace here pleads the Cause of his Cotemporaries, first against the Taste of the Town, whose humour it was to magnify the Authors of the preceding Age; secondly against the Court and Nobi- lity, who encouraged only the Writers for the Theatre; and lastly against the Emperor himself, who had conceived them of little Use to the Government. He shews (by a View of the Progress of Learning, and the change of Taste among the Romans) that the Introduction of the Polite Arts of Greece had given the Writers of his Time great advantages over their Predecessors; that their Morals were much improved, and the Licence of those ancient Poets restrained: that Satire and Comedy were become more just and useful; that whatever extravagancies were left on the Stage, were owing to the Ill Taste of the Nobility; that Poets, under due Regulations, were in many respects useful to the State, and concludes, that it was upon them the Emperor himself must depend, for his Fame with Posterity.

We may farther learn from this Epistle, that Horace made his Court to this Great Prince by writing with a decent Freedom toward him, with a just Contempt of his low Flatterers, and with a manly Regard to his own Character. P.

the common practice of those amongst us, who have distinguished themselves in the learned world, to ascribe the ill treatment they have met with, from those they endeavour to oblige, to so bad a cause as envy. But surely without reason; for we find our Countrymen of the same candid disposition with the Athenians, as Socrates describes it, in the Euthyphro of Plato, They are well content (says he) to allow the Pretensions of reputed eminence; it is only when a man will write, and presume to give a proof of it, that they begin to grow angry. We, too, are as ready to allow the reputation of eminence, to those whose modesty has made them decline giving us a specimen of it. A temper surely very distant from envy. We ought not then to ascribe that violent ferment good men are apt to work themselves into, and the struggle they make to suppress the reputation of him who pretends to give a proof of what they are so willing to take for granted, to any thing but an eager concern for the public welfare. for. But he generally complied with the ignorance, and the ill taste of his Audience. However, in his most irregular plays his wit and sublimity make amends for his transgression of the rules of art ; and support him in it. But, happily for the improvement of the Drama, he had a competitor in JOHNSON, who, with a greater temptation to comply with the bad taste of the age, had not the same force of genius to support him in it. Johnson, therefore, borrowed all he could from art ; and like an experienced general, when he could not depend on his natural strength, kept still behind his lines. The consequence was, that Shakespear having once tried to reform the taste [See Hamlet] and on failing, had complied with it, became the favourite Poet of the People ; while Johnson, who, for the reason given above, could not be so complaisant, was all his life long in a state of war with them. This, and not (as is commonly supposed) the ignorance of one, and the superior knowledge of the other, was the true cause of that difference which we find between these two Capital Writers, in the art and construction of their pieces. So that here, we see, a want of sufficient natural genius

VER. 85. Wycherly] The chief support of this writer's reputation is his famous comedy of the Plain Dealer ; which is taken from Moliere's Misanthrope. But it has so happen'd that while Moliere's Misanthrope is but a Plain Dealer, Wycherly's Plain Dealer is a downright Misanthrope. Whether this was owing to the different genius of the Nations, or to the different Judgments of the Poets, is left for the Critics to determine.

*Ibid. VER. 102. And God the Father turns a School-divine.] Ben Johnson ridicules the humour of his age, when the audience chose to take their knowledge of English history from Shakespear's plays. The present fashion for Milton makes us as ready to learn our religion from the Paradise lost: tho' it be certain, he was as poor and fanciful a Divine, as Shakespear was a licentious Historian. This appears from many places of that admirable Poem. As he here degrades the Father by making him follow the School-systems; so, in his Paradise regained, he dishonours the Son, by making him Author of the MAHOMETAN Oeconomy of grace.

NOTES.

VER. 104. Bentley.] This excellent critic, who had the fortune to be extravagantly despised and ridiculed by two of the greatest wits, and as extravagantly feared and flattered by two of the greatest Scholars of his time, will deserve to have that justice done him now, which he never met with while alive.

He was a great master both of the languages and the learning of polite Antiquity; whose writings he studied with no other design than to correct the errors of the text. For this he had a strong natural understanding, a great share of penetration, and a sagacity and acumen very uncommon. All which qualities he had greatly improved by long exercise and application. Yet, at the same time, he had so little of that elegance of judgment, we call Taste, that he knew nothing of Style, as it accommodates itself, and is appropriated to the various kinds of composition. And his reasoning faculty being infinitely better than that of his Imagination, the style of poetry was what he the least understood. So that, that clearness of conception, which so much assisted his critical sagacity, in discovering and reforming errors in books of science, where a philosophical precision, and grammatical exactness of language is employed, served but to betray him into absurd and extravagant conjectures when ever he attempted to reform the text of a Poet, whose diction he was always for deducing to the prosaic rules of logical severity; and whenever he found what a great master of speech calls verbum ardens, he was sure not to leave it till he had thoroughly quenched it in his critical standish. But to make philology amends, he was a perfect master of all the mysteries of the ancient Rythmus.

The most important of his works, as a scholar, is his Critic on the Epistles of Phalaris : and the least considerable, his Remarks on the Discourse concerning Free-thinking. Yet the first, with all its superiority of Learning, Argument, and Truth, was borne down by the vivacity and clamour of a Party, which (as usual) carried the Public along with them : while the other, employed only in the easy and trifling task of exposing a very dull and very ignorant Rhapsodist, was as extravagantly extolled. For it was his odd fortune (as our Poet expresses it) to pass for

A Wit with Dunces, and a Dunce with Wits :

whereas in truth he was neither one nor the other. The injustice that had been done him in the first case, made him always speak, amongst his friends, of the blind partiality of the public in the latter, with the contempt it deserved. For however he might sometime mistake his fort, he was never the dupe of the Public judgment. Of which a learned Prelate, now living, gave me this instance : He accidentally met Bentley in the days of Phalaris ; and after having complimented him on that noble piece of Criticism (the Answer to the Oxford writers) he bad him not be discouraged at this run upon him : for tho' they had got the laughs on their side, yet mere wit and railery could not hold it out long against a work of so much merit. To which the other replied, " Indeed, Dr. S. I am

Ibid. his desp'rate book] Alluding to the several passages of Milton, which Bentley has reprobated, by including within hocks, some with judgment, and some without.

VER. 108. The Mob of Gentlemen who wrote with Ease ;] The Poet has here very happily exemplified this envied quality of easy writing in the turn of the verses that expose it. These wits formed themselves, for the most part, on Suckling, a fine original genius. But on so slippery a ground it was no wonder such Imitators should fall; and either sink his free and easy manner into insipidity, or abuse it to ribaldry and licentiousness: they did both; till easy writing came to be defined a negligence of what they said, and how they said it. This was called writing like a Gentleman. But as fashions take their turn, Lord Shaftesbury has introduced a new sort of Gentleman like writing, which consists indeed, like the other, in a negligence of what is said, but joined to much affectation in the manner of saying it.

VER. 109. Sprat,] Rightly put at the head of the small wits. He is now known to most advantage as the friend of Mr. Cowley. His Learning was comprised in the well rounding a period: For, as Seneca said of Triarius, “ Compositione verborum belle cadentium multos Scholasticos delectabat, omnes decipiebat.” As to the turn of his piety and genius, it is best seen by his last Will and Testament, where he gives God thanks, that he, who had turgid expression, and reduced it to its just value, which, hitherto, the small critics had mistakeu for the sublime, these latter are now apt to suspect all they do not understand, to be bombast : like the Idiot in Cervantes, who having been beat for not distinguishing between a Cur and a Greyhound, imagined every dog he met, to be a Cur-dog. So our respectable Laureat will needs imitate his betters, and dare to deride too with the best. " In what raptures (says he) have I seen an audience, at the furious fustian, and turgid rants of Nat. Lee's Alexander the Great. Let me give you a sample. Alexander, in a full croud of courtiers, says,

" When Glory, like the dazzling Eagle, stood

" Perch'd on my Beaver in the Granic flood ;

" When Fortune's self my standard trembling bore,

" And the pale Fates stood frightened on the shore ;

" When the Immortals on the billows rode,

" And I myself appear'd the leading God.

NOTES.

“ If this passage has merit, let us see what figure it would “ make upon canvas ; what sort of picture would arise
 “ from it. If Le Brun had seen this lofty description, “ what one image could he have possibly taken from it ?
 “ In what colours could he have shewn us Glory perch'd
 “ upon a beaver ? How could he have drawn Fortune “ trembling ? Or indeed what use could he have made
 “ of pale Fates, or Immortals riding upon billows, with this “ blustering God of his own making at the head of “ them ?” Apol. for his life, p. 88. Ed. Oct.—If the Au- dience were in raptures, I admire their good taste : for, I think, these six lines are as truly sublime as any thing we have in the English Language. But the Critic is for having the images they convey painted. And, it must be owned, this is no ill test of distinguishing sound from sub- stance. He is indeed a little mistaken in his Painter, as the Connoisseurs will tell him. For this subject demands the genius of Rubens rather than Le Brun. And, from such a one, he might have a very good picture for his money.
 He seems not to have reflected that Fortune and the Fates, tho’ imaginary, are yet personified Beings. And Glory, here, is something more substantial ; for by the line,

When Glory, like the dazzling Eagle, stood, etc.

is meant that Glory appear’d in the shape of an Eagle on his crest.

The truth is, these six lines, unluckily for the Laureate’s criticism, contain not only the most sublime but the most judicious imagery that poetry could conceive or paint.

Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,
 (Tho' but, perhaps, a muster-roll of Names)
 How will our Fathers rise up in a rage, 125
 And swear, all shame is lost in George's Age!
 You'd think ' no Fools disgrac'd the former reign,
 Did not some grave Examples yet remain,

NOTES.

The first line alludes to the tradition of an Eagle's hovering over Alexander's head; at the battle of Arbela, as a pre-sage of Victory; Lee, I suppose, might think himself at liberty to transfer it to the passage of the Granicus; and this the poet has made the ground of his fine imagination, of Glory in the shape of an Eagle, in the style of Homer, who represents Terror, Affright, and a number of such fantastic Beings, swarming on the crests of his heroes.

The representing Fortune, in the third line, as his standard-bearer, is very happy. It is not only in the true spirit of poetry, but it gives us a right idea of the nature of his Asiatic expedition; and the making her tremble, as she displayed it, in the passage of the Granicus, the justest notion of the exceeding rashness of that adventure.

The fourth line greatly heightens all these images, by making the Fates themselves (who had destined the Persian empire to destruction, and called Alexander out of Greece to execute their decrees) as half afraid that this desperate Madman would frustrate their purpose.

But the sublime of the two last verses exceeds all the rest. They are a beautiful allusion to the battle of Sca-mander in Homer, where Achilles led on the Gods themselves to the destruction of Troy, thro' the billows of that River, which opposed their passage. And the exquisite judgment of the Poet in this allusion is seen by those, who have heard that Achilles was Alexander's model of Heroism, and Homer his favourite Historian. Lastly, as to the propriety of Alexander's thus extolling his own actions,

Jam v' Saliare Nūmae carmen qui laudat, et illud,
 Quod mecum ignorat, solus vult scire videri ;
 Ingeniis non ille favet plauditque sepultis,
 Nostra sed impugnat, nos noſtraque lividus odit.

From what has been ſaid, we may collect how dangerous it is for a writer to give his opinion out of his own Profeſſion, how well ſoever he may ſucceed within it. For this juſtice is due to the Laureate, that that part of his book, where he has drawn the characters of the ſet of Players on whom he formed himſelf, or whom he emulated, and that, with a performance equal to the moſt perfect of theirs, is indeed (bating the ſingularity of his phraſe) a Maſter-piece in its kind. The epithet well-mouth'd, a term of the chace, here applied to his successor, was not given without a particular design, and to insinuate, that there was as wide a difference between their performances, as there is between scientific music, and the harmony of brute sounds, between elocution and vociferation. VER. 146. And ev'ry flow'ry Courtier writ Romance.] The rise and progress of the several branches of literary Science is one of the most curious parts of the history of the human mind, and yet is that which amongst us is least attended to. This of fictitious history is not below our notice. The close connexion which every individual has with all that relates to MAN in general strongly inclines us to turn our observation upon human affairs, in preference to other attentions, and eagerly to wait the progress and issue of them. But as the course of human actions is too slow to gratify our curiosity, observant men very early contrived to satisfy its impatience by the invention of history. Which by recording the principal circumstances of past Facts, and laying them close together, in a continued narration, kept the mind from languishing, and gave constant exercise to its reflections.

But as it commonly happens, that in all indulgent refinements on our satisfactions, the Procurers to our pleasures run into excess; so it happened here. Strict matters of fact, however delicately dressed up, soon grew too simple and insipid to a taste stimulated by the luxury of art:

' In Days of Ease, when now the weary Sword
 Was sheath'd, and Luxury with Charles restor'd ; 140

 And ev'ry flow'ry Courtier writ Romance.

NOTES.

They wanted something of more poignancy to quicken and enforce a jaded appetite. Hence in the politer ages those feigned histories relating the quick turns of capricious Fortune ; and, in the more barbarous, the ROMANCES, abounding with the false provocative of enchantment and miraculous adventures.

But satiety, in things unnatural, brings on disgust. And the reader at length began to see that too eager a pursuit after adventures had drawn him from, what first engaged his attention, MAN and his ways, into the Fairy walks of Monsters and Chimera's. And now those who had run furthest after these delusions, were the first that recovered themselves. For the next species of fiction, which took its name from its NOVELTY, was of Spanish invention. These presented us with something of humanity ; but in a forced unnatural state. For as every thing before was conducted by Necromancy, so all now was managed by intrigue. And tho' it had indeed a kind of life, it had yet, as in its infancy, nothing of manners. On which account those who could not penetrate into the ill constitution of its plan, yet grew disgusted at the dryness of the Conduct, and want of ease in the Catastrophe.

The avoiding these defects gave rise to the HEROICAL ROMANCES of the French, here ridiculed by our Poet ; in which some celebrated story of antiquity was so polluted by modern fable and invention, as was just enough to shew that the contrivers of them neither knew how to lye nor speak truth. In these voluminous extravagances, Love and Honour supplied the place of Life and Manners. But the over-refinement of Platonic sentiments always sinks into the dregs of the gentle passion. Thus in attempting a more natural representation of it in the little AMATORY NOVELS which succeeded those heavier volumes, tho' the writers avoided the dryness of the Spanish Intrigue, and the extravagance of the French Heroism, yet, by giving too natural a picture of their subject, they introduced a worse evil than a corruption of Taste, and that was a corruption of Heart.

At length this great People (to whom, it must be owned, every branch of Science has been infinitely indebted) hit upon the true secret, by which alone a deviation from strict fact, in the commerce of Man, could be really amusing to an improved mind, or useful to promote that improvement. And this was by a faithful and chaste copy of real LIFE AND MANNERS.

The love of Liberty.—Mr. Voltaire, while in England, writes thus to a friend in Paris—“ I had a mind at first to “ print our poor Henry at my own expences in London ;
 “ but the loss of my money is a sad stop to my design. I “ question if I shall try the way of Subscriptions by the “ favour of the Court. I am weary of Courts. All that is “ King or belongs to a King, frights my republican Philo“ sophy. I wont drink the least draught of Slavery in the “ Land of Liberty. I have written freely to—and I will “ always do so, having no reason to lay myself under any “ restraint. I fear, I hope nothing from your Country : all “ that I wish for, is to see you one day here. I am en“ tertaining myself with this pleasant hope. If it is but “ a dream, let me enjoy it : don’t undeceive me : let me “ believe I shall have the pleasure to see you in London,

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
 His servants up, and rise by five o'clock,
 Instruct his Family in ev'ry rule,
 And send his Wife to church, his Son to school.
 To<sup>f</sup> worship like his Fathers, was his care; 165
 To teach their frugal Virtues to his Heir;
 To prove, that Luxury could never hold;
 And place, on good & Security, his Gold.
 Now times are chang'd, and one<sup>h</sup> Poetic Itch
 Has seiz'd the Court and City, poor and rich: 170
 Sons, Sires, and Grandfires, all will wear the bays,
 Our Wives read Milton, and our Daughters Plays,
 To Theatres, and to Rehearsals throng,
 And all our Grace at table is a Song.
 I, who so oft renounce the Muses, <sup>i</sup> lye, 175
 Not—'s self e'er tells more Fibs than I;
 When sick of Muse, or follies we deplore,
 And promise our best Friends to rhyme no more;
 We wake next morning in a raging fit,
 And call for pen and ink to show our Wit. 180

VER. 180. to shew our Wit.] The force of this consists in the ambiguity.—To shew how constant we are to our resolutions—or, to shew what fine verses we can make.

VER. 181. He serv'd &c.] To the simple elegance of the original, the Poet has here added great spirit and vivacity, without departing from the fidelity of a translation.

VER. 182. Ward] A famous Empiric, whose Pill and Drop had several surprizing Effects, and were one of the principal subjects of writing and conversation at this time.

P.

Ibid. Ward try'd on Puppies, and the Poor, his Drop;] It was the Poet's purpose to do Mr. Ward honour in assigning to him that medical Aphorism of regular practice,

 Sometimes the Folly benefits mankind ;
 And rarely <sup>o</sup> Av'rice taints the tuneful mind.

 He ne'er rebels, or plots, like other men :

NOTES.

Nor dare to practise till they've learnt to dance.] By no means an insinuation as if these travelling Doctors had mispent their time. Radcliff had sent them on a medicinal mission, to examine the produce of each Country, and see in what it might be made subservient to the art of healing. The native commodity of France is DANCING. Mercurialis gives the Gymnastics, of which this is part, a necessary place amongst the non-naturals (by which term the Physicians mean air, exercise, diet, &c. as if the natural way of living in health was by physic) and the dignity and eminence of this part of the Gymnastics is learnedly and elaborately explained in that curious Dissertation on dancing, in the 13th chap. of the 2<sup>d</sup> Vol. of the Life of King David.

NOTES.

VER. 201. Of little use, &c.] There is a poignancy in the following verses, which the original did not aim at; nor affect.

VER. 204. And (tho' no Soldier)] Horace had not acquitted himself much to his credit in this capacity (non bene relicta parmula) in the battle of Philippi. It is manifest he alludes to himself, in this whole account of a Poet's character; but with an intermixture of irony: Vivit filiquis et pane secundo has a relation to his Epicurism; Os tenerum pueri, is ridicule: The nobler office of a Poet follows: Torquet ab obscœnis—Mox etiam pectus—Recte facta refert, &c. which the Imitator has apply'd where he thinks it more due than to himself. He hopes to be pardoned; if, as he is sincerely inclined to praise what deserves to be praised, he arraigns what deserves to be arraigned, in the 210, 211, and 212th Verses. P.

VER. 213. Unhappy Dryden—In all Charles's days,—Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays; The sudden stop after mentioning the name of Dryden has a great beauty. The Poet's tenderness for his Master is expressed in the second line by making his case general; and his honour for him, in the first line, by making his case particular, as the only one that deserved pity.

To cheat a Friend, or Ward, he leaves to Peter ;
 The good man heaps up nothing but mere metre,
 Enjoys his garden and his book in quiet ;
 And then—a perfect Hermit in his diet. 200.

Of little use the Man you may suppose,
 Who says in verse what others say in prose ;
 Yet let me show, a Poet's of some weight,
 And ( tho' no Soldier ) useful to the State.
 What will a Child learn sooner than a song? 205
 What better teach a Foreigner the tongue ?
 What's long or short, each accent where to place,
 And speak in public with some sort of grace.
 I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
 Unless he praise some Monster of a King ; 210
 Or Virtue, or Religion turn to sport,
 To please a lewd, or unbelieving Court.
 Unhappy Dryden !—In all Charles's days,
 Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays ;
 And in our own ( excuse some Courtly stains ) 215
 No whiter page than Addison remains.

NOTES.

VEE. 215. excuse some Courtly strains] We are not to understand this as a disapprobation of Mr. Addison for celebrating the virtues of the present Royal Family. It relates to a certain circumstance, in which he thought that amiable Poet did not act with the ingenuity that became his character.

When Mr. Addison, in the year 1713, had finished his Cato, he brought it to Mr. Pope for his judgment. Our Poet, who thought the sentiments excellent, but the action not enough theatrical, gave him his opinion fairly, and told him that he had better not bring it upon the Stage, but print it like a classical performance, which would perfectly answer his design. Mr. Addison approved of this advice ; and seemed disposed to follow it. But soon after he came to Mr. Pope, and told him, that some friends, whom he could not disoblige, insisted on his having it acted. However he assured Mr. Pope that it was with no Party views, and desired him to satisfy the Treasurer and the Secretary in that particular ; and at the same time gave him the Poem to carry to them for their perusal. Our Poet executed his commission in the most friendly manner ; and the Play, and the project for bringing it upon the Stage, had their approbation and encouragement. Throughout the carriage of this whole affair, Mr. Addison was so exceedingly afraid of party imputations, that when Mr. Pope, at his request, wrote the famous prologue to it, and had said, he was much troubled, said it would be called, stirring the people to rebellion ; and earnestly begg’d he would soften it into something less obnoxious. On this account it was altered, as it now stands, to—Britons, attend,—though at the expence both of the sense and spirit. Notwithstanding this, the very next year, when the present illustrious Family came to the succession, Mr. Addison thought fit to make a merit of CATO, as purposely and directly written to oppose to the schemes of a faction. His poem, to her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, beginning in this manner,

“ Britons, ARISE, be worth like this approv’d,

“ And shew you have the virtue to be mov’d.

 "And, boldly rising for Britannia's Laws,

VER. 216. No whiter page than Addison remains,] Mr. Addison's literary character is much mistaken, as characters generally are when taken (as his has been) in the gross. He was but an ordinary poet; and a worse critic. His verses are heavy, and his judgment of Men and Books superficial. But in the pleasantry of comic adventures, and in the dignity of moral allegories, he is inimitable. Nature having joined in him, as she had done once before in Lucian (who wanted the other's wisdom to make a right use of it) the sublime of Plato to the humour of Menander.

NOTES.

VER. 259. Most warp'd to Flatt'ry's side, &c.] These two lines (notwithstanding the reference) are an addition to the Original. They seem'd necessary to compleat the History of the rise and progress of Wit; and, if attended to, will be seen to make much for the argument the Poet

The joy their wives, their sons, and servants share,
Ease of their toil, and part'ners of their care: 246

The laugh, the jest, attendants on the bowl,
Smooth'd ev'ry brow, and open'd ev'ry soul:
With growing years the pleasing Licence grew,
And <sup>f</sup> Taunts alternate innocently flew. 250

But Times corrupt, and <sup>s</sup> Nature, ill-inclin'd, Produc'd the point that left a sting behind;
Till friend with friend, and families at strife,
Triumphant Malice rag'd thro' private life.

than to draw and colour manners. Besides, our ignorance of high life makes false manners in Tragedy escape unobserved ; but unnatural action in Comedy lies hid from no body. Hence it is, that the difficulty of succeeding lies on the side of the comic writer. To support these observations, let me ask, from whence arises our disgust, when the scene in Comedy is laid abroad, and that of Tragedy at home. It appears, at first sight, whimsical and capricious, but has its foundation in nature. What we chiefly seek in Comedy is a true image of life and manners ; but we are not easily brought to think we have it given us, when dressed in foreign modes and fashions. And yet a good writer must follow his scene and observe decorum. On the contrary, 'tis the action in Tragedy which most engages our attention. But to fit a domestic occurrence for the stage we must take greater liberties

But in known Images of life, I guess
 The labour greater, as th' indulgence less'. 285
 Observe how seldom ev'n the best succeed :
 Tell me if ' Congreve's Fools are Fools indeed ?
 What pert, low Dialogue has Farqu'ar writ !
 How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit !
 The stage how <sup>u</sup> loosely does Astræa tread, 290
 Who fairly puts all Characters to bed !
 And idle Cibber, how he breaks the laws,
 To make poor Pinky <sup>w</sup> eat with vast applause !
 But fill their <sup>x</sup> purse, our Poet's work is done, Alike to them, by Pathos or by Pun. 295 with the action than a well known story will allow. Not but perhaps another reason might be given for our disapprobation of this inverted state of the scene. Comedy deals much in satire, Tragedy in panegyric : and our natural malignity will more easily suffer us to find the ridiculous at home, than the heroic.

as was the custom in their triumphs. In other respects the imitation has the preference. It is more just. For a Poet makes his first entrance on the stage not, immediately, to Triumph, but to try his Fortune. However,

'Tis he, ° who gives my breast a thousand pains,
 Can make me feel each Passion that he feigns;

 With Pity, and with Terror, tear my heart; 345
 And snatch me, o'er the earth, or thro' the air,
 To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

But not this part of the Poetic state,
 Alone, deserves the favour of the Great:
 Think of those Authors, Sir, who would rely 350
 More on a Reader's sense, than Gazer's eye.
 Or who shall wander where the Muses sing?
 Who climb their mountain, or who taste their spring?
 How shall we fill a Library with Wit,
 When Merlin's Cave is half unfurnish'd yet? 355

My Liege! why Writers little claim your thought,
 I guess; and, with their leave, will tell the fault:
 We Poets are (upon a Poet's word)
 Of all mankind, the creatures most absurd:
 The season, when to come, and when to go, 360
 To sing, or cease to sing, we never know;
 And if we will recite nine hours in ten,
 You lose your patience, just like other men.
 Then too we hurt ourselves, when to defend
 A single verse, we quarrel with a friend; 365

VER. 385. But Kings in Wit may want discerning Spirit.] This is not much to be wondered at since the Sacerdotal Character has been separated from the Regal. This discerning of Spirits now seems to be the allotment of the ecclesiastical branch, which the following instance will put out of doubt. The famous HUGO GROTIUS had, somehow or other, surprized the world into an early admiration of his parts and virtues. But his Grace Archbishop Abbot was not to be deceived by dazzling appearances.

VZR. 405. And I'm not us'd to Panegyric strains ;] Archbishop Tillotson hath said, " That satire and invective were
 " the easiest kind of wit, because almost any degree of it " will serve to abuse and find fault. For wit (says he) is a " keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with
 " it. But to carve a beautiful image and polish it, requires " great art and dexterity. To praise any thing well, is an " argument of much more wit than to abuse ; a little wit,
 " and a great deal of ill-nature, will furnish a man for
 " satire, but the greatest instance of wit is to commend
 " well." Thus far this candid Prelate. And I, in my turn, might as well say, that Satire was the most difficult,

What<sup>f</sup> seas you travers'd, and what fields you fought !
 Your Country's Peace, how oft, how dearly bought !

and Panegyric the most easy thing in nature ; for that any barber-surgeon can curl and shave, and give cosmetic-washes for the skin ; but it requires the abilities of an Anatomist to dissect and lay open the whole interior of the human frame. But the truth is, these similitudes prove nothing, but the good fancy, or the ill judgment of the user. The one is just as easy to do ill, and as difficult to do well as the other. In our Author's Essay on the Characters of Men, the Encomium on Lord Cobham, and the Satire on Lord Wharton, are the equal efforts of the same great genius. There is one advantage indeed in Satire over Panegyric, which every body has taken notice of, that it is more readily received ; but this does not shew that it is more easily written.

VER. 4. This Lad, Sir, is of Blois :] A Town in Beauce, where the French tongue is spoken in great purity.

VER. 15. But, Sir, to you, with what would I not part ?]

E P I S T L E II.

DEAR Col'nel, COBHAM's and your country's Friend!

You love a Verse, take such as I can send.

Bows and begins—" This Lad, Sir, is of Blois :

" Observe his shape how clean ! his locks how curl'd !

" My only son, I'd have him see the world ; 6

" His French is pure ; his Voice too—you shall hear.

" Sir, he's your slave, for twenty pound a year.

" Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,

" Your Barber, Cook, Upholst'rer, what you please :

" A perfect genius at an Op'ra-song— 11

" To say too much, might do my honour wrong.

" Take him with all his virtues, on my word ;

" His whole ambition was to serve a Lord ;

" But, Sir, to you, with what would I not part ? 15

" Tho' faith, I fear, 'twill break his Mother's heart.

" Once (and but once) I caught him in a lye,

" And then, unwhipp'd, he had the grace to cry :

" The fault he has I fairly shall reveal,

" (Could you o'erlook but that) it is, to steal. 20

NOTES.

The numbers well express the unwillingness of parting with what one can ill spare.

“ Quivis ferret idem : semel hic cessavit, et (ut fit)

“ In scalis latuit metuens pendentis habenae :

“ Des numos, excepta nihil te si fuga laedit.

° Ille ferat pretium, poenae securus, opinor.

Prudens emisti vitiosum : dicta tibi est lex.

Insequeris tamen hunc, et lite moraris iniqua.

ᵃ Dixi me pigrum proficiscenti tibi, dixi

Talibus officiis prope mancum : ne mea faëvus

Jurgares ad te quod epistola nulla veniret.

Quid tum profeci, mecum facientia jura

Si tamen attentas ? quereris super hoc etiam, quod

Exspectata tibi non mittam carmina mendax.

° Luculli miles collecta viatica multis

Aerumnis, lassus dum noctu stertit, ad assem

Perdiderat : post hoc vehemens lupus, et sibi et hosti

Iratus pariter, jejunis dentibus acer,

Praesidium regale loco dejecit, ut aiunt,

NOTES.

VER. 24. I think Sir Godfrey] An eminent Justice of Peace, who decided much in the manner of Sancho Pancha. P. Sir Godfrey Kneller.

VER. 33, In Anna's Wars, &c.] Many parts of this story are well told ; but, on the whole, it is much inferior to the original.

c If, after this, you took the graceless lad,
 Could you complain, my Friend, he prov'd so bad?
 Faith, in such case, if you should prosecute,
 I think Sir Godfrey should decide the suit;
 Who sent the Thief that stole the Cash, away, 25
 And punish'd him that put it in his way.

d Consider then, and judge me in this light;
 I told you when I went, I could not write;
 You said the same; and are you discontent
 With Laws, to which you gave your own assent?
 Nay worse, to ask for Verse at such a time! 31
 D'ye think me good for nothing but to rhyme?

e In ANNA's Wars, a Soldier poor and old
 Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold:
 Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night, 35
 He slept, poor dog! and lost it, to a doit.
 This put the man in such a desp'rate mind,
 Between revenge, and grief, and hunger join'd
 Against the foe, himself, and all mankind. }
 He leap'd the trenches, scal'd a Castle-wall, 40
 Tore down a Standard, took the Fort and all.

NOTES.

VER. 37. This put the man, &c.] Greatly below the Original,

Post hoc vehemens lupus, et sibi et hosti
 Iratus pariter, jejunis dentibus acer.

The last words are particularly elegant and humorous.

Summe munito, et multarum divite rerum.
 Clarus ob id factum, donis ornatur honestis,
 Accipit et bis dena super sestertia numûm.
 Forte sub hoc tempus castellum evertere praetor
Nescio quod cupiens, hortari coepit eundem
 Verbis, quae timido quoque possent addere mentem:
 I, bonè; quo virtus tua te vocat: i pede fausto,
 Grandia laturus meritorum praemia: quid stas?
 Post haec ille catus, quantumvis rusticus, “ Ibit, “ Ibit eo, quo vis, qui zonam perdidit, inquit.
 ‘ Romae nutriri mihi contigit, atque doceri,
 Iratus Graiis quantum nocuisset Achilles.

NOTES.

VER. 43. Gave him much praise, and some reward beside.] For the sake of a stroke of satire, he has here weakened that circumstance, on which the turn of the story depends. Horace avoided it, tho’ the avaricious character of Lucullus was a tempting occasion to indulge his raillery.

VER. 51. Let him take castles who has ne’er a groat.] This has neither the force nor the justness of the original. Horace makes his Soldier say, for it was not his poverty, but his loss, that pushed him upon danger; many being equal to the one, who cannot, bear the other. What betray’d our poet into this inaccuracy of expression was it’s suiting better with the application. But in a great writer we pardon nothing. And such should never forget, that the expression is not perfect, but when the ideas it conveys fit both the tale and the application: for then they reflect mutual light upon one another.

Ibit,

Ibit eo, quo vis, qui zonam perdidit.

“ Prodigious well ;” his great Commander cry’d,
 Gave him much praise, and some reward beside.
 Next pleas’d his Excellence a town to batter ;
 (Its name I know not, and its no great matter) 45
 “ Go on; my Friend (he cry’d) see yonder walls !
 “ Advance and conquer ! go where glory calls !
 “ More honours, more rewards, attend the brave.”
 Don’t you remember what reply he gave ?
 “ D’ye think me, noble Gen’ral, such a Sot ? 50
 “ Let him take castles who has ne’er a groat.”
 ‘ Bred up at home, full early I begun
 To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus’ son.

NOTES.

VER. 52. Bred up at home, &c.] The Reader may possibly have a curiosity to know something more of Mr. Pope’s education than what this verse tells him ; and tho’ much more would be too trifling to enter into a just volume of his life, it may do no dishonour to one of these cursory notes. He was taught his letters very early by an Aunt ; and, from thence, to his eighth year, he took great delight in reading. He learned to write of himself by copying after printed books, whose characters he brought himself to imitate in great perfection. At eight, he was put under one Taverner, a Priest, who taught him the rudiments of the Latin and Greek tongues, together : From him, in a little time, he was sent to a private school at Twiford near Winchester. Here, he continued about a year, and was then removed to another, near Hyde-park Corner. Under these two last Masters he lost the little he had got under the Priest. At Twelve, he went with his Father into the Forest ; where he was, for a few months, under another Priest, and with as little success as before.

NOTES.

For, as he used to say, he never could learn any thing which he did not pursue with pleasure. And these miserable pedants had not the art of making his studies an amusement to him. Upon the remnants, therefore, of this small stock, so hardly picked up, so easily lost, and recovered (as we shall see) with so much labour, he at length thought fit to become his own master. And now the only method of study he prescribed to himself was reading those classic writers, who afforded him most entertainment. So that while he was intent upon the subject, with a strong appetite for Knowledge, and an equal passion for Poetry, he insensibly got Latin and Greek. And, what was extraordinary, his impatience of restraint, in the usual forms, did not hinder his subjecting himself, now he was his own master, to all the drudgery and fatigue of perpetually recurring to his Grammar and Lexicon. By the time he was fifteen he had acquired a very ready habit in the learned languages, when a strong fancy came into his head to remove to London to learn French and Italian. His Family (whose only object was the preservation of his miserably infirm body) regarded it as a very wild project. But he persisted in it, and they gave way: to town he went; and mastered those two languages with surprizing dispatch. The whole treasure of Parnassus now lay open to him; and, between this and his twentieth year, his constant employment was reading the most considerable poets and critics in the Greek, Latin, French, Italian,

Besides, my Father taught me from a lad,
 The better art to know the good from bad :            55
 (And little sure imported to remove,
 To hunt for Truth in Maudlin's learned grove.)
 But knottier points we knew not half so well, and English languages. But, all this, without much order, as chance threw them in his way, or the caprice of desultory reading directed his choice. This being one continued indulgence of his curiosity or amusement, made him always speak of these four or five years as the most pleasurable part of his life.

Yet his true understanding would not suffer him to continue long easy under so defective an education. For a vast memory, and an accurate judgment, which remedied many of its inconveniences, made him but the more sensible of them all. So that, at twenty, when the impetuosity of his spirits began to permit his genius to be put under restraint, he went over all the parts of his education a-new, from the very beginning, and in a regular, and more artful manner. He penetrated into the general grounds and reasons of speech ; he learnt to distinguish the several species of style ; he studied the peculiar genius and character of each language ; he reduced his natural talent for poetry to a science, and mastered those parts of philosophy that would most contribute to enrich his vein. And all this, with such continued attention, labour, and severity, that he used to say, he had been seven years (that is, from twenty to twenty-seven) in unlearning all he had been acquiring for twice that time.

circumstance has a happier application in the imitation than in the original ; and properly introduces the 68th verse.

VER. 65. He stuck to poverty with peace of mind,] There was something very singular in the Oeconomy of Mr. Pope's father. He was a Merchant, and lived in London. At the Revolution he left off trade, and converted his effects into money, amounting to between fifteen and twenty thousand pounds, with which he retired into the country. As he was a Papist, he could not purchase, nor put his money to interest on real security ; and as he adhered to the interests of King James, he made a point of conscience not to lend it to the new Government : so he kept it in his chest, and lived upon the Principal ; till, by that time his son came to the succession, it was almost all fairly spent.

Hopes after hopes of pious Papists fail'd,
 While mighty WILLIAM's thund'ring arm prevail'd.
 For Right Hereditary tax'd and fin'd,
 He stuck to poverty with peace of mind; 65
 And me, the Muses help'd to undergo it;
 Convict a Papist he, and I a Poet.
 But (thanks to Homer) since I live and thrive,

NOTES.

VER. 68. But (thanks to Homer) &c.] He began the Iliad at twenty-five, and finished it in five years. It was published for his own benefit by subscription. He sold it to Lintot the Bookseller, on the following terms, Twelve hundred pounds paid down, and all the Books for his Subscribers. The Odyssy was published in the same manner, and sold on the same conditions; except only that instead of Twelve he had Six hundred pounds. He was assisted in this latter work by Broome and Fenton, to the first of whom he gave Six hundred pounds; and to the other, Three hundred.

VER. 69. Indebted to no Prince or Peer alive,] Indeed; it would be very hard upon Authors, if the subscribing for a Book, which does honour to one's Age and Country, and consequently reflects back part of it on the Subscribers, should be esteemed a debt or obligation.

NOTES.

VER. 83. and that Pindaric lays?] Of our modern Lyric poetry, the English is Pindaric, and the Latin Horatian. The first is like boiled meats, of different tastes and flavours, but all insipid: The other, like the same meats, potted, all of one spicy taste, and equally high flavour'd. The reason is, the English Ode-makers only imitate Pindar's sense; whereas the Latin employ the very words of Horace.

VER. 87. Oldfield—Dartineuf] Two celebrated Gluttons.

In one our Frolics, one Amusements end,
In one a Mistress drops, in one a Friend : 75

This subtle Thief of life, this paltry Time,
What will it leave me, if it snatch my rhyme ?

If ev'ry wheel of that unweary'd Mill,
That turn'd ten thousand verses, now stands still ?

When out of twenty I can please not two ;

When this Heroics only deigns to praise,
Sharp Satire that, and that Pindaric lays ?

One likes the Pheasant's wing, and one the leg ;
The vulgar boil, the learned roast an egg. 85

Hard task ! to hit the palate of such guests,
When Oldfield loves, what Dartineuf detests.

—This instance adds a beauty to the whole passage, as intimating that the demand for verse is only a species of luxury.

VER. 174. Prune the luxuriant, &c.] Our Poet, at about fifteen, got acquainted with Walsh, whose candour and judgment he has celebrated in his Essay on Criticism. Walsh encouraged him greatly, and used to tell him, there was one road still open for distinction, in which he might excel the rest of his countrymen, and that was by correctness, in which the English Poets had been remarkably deficient. For tho' we have had several great Genius's, yet not one of them knew how to prune his luxuriances. This therefore, as he had talents that seem capable of things worthy improving, should be his principal study. Our young Author followed his Advice, till habit made correcting the most agreeable, as well as useful, of all his poetical exercises. And the delight he took in it produced the effect he speaks of in the following lines,

Then polish all with so much life and ease,
 You think 'tis nature, and a knack to please.

We are not commonly taught to expect this effect from correction ; and it has been observed oftener, to produce a heavy stiffness, which by another image the ancients called smelling of the lamp. And without doubt this will, most an end, be the consequence, when it is discharged with pain, and merely as a task. But when it becomes an exercise of pleasure, the judgment lying no harder on the fancy, than to direct its sallies ; will preserve the life ; and the fancy will so lighten the judgment as to produce ease.

VER. 175. But show no mercy to an empty line ;] To such, our Poet was always inexorable. Unless it was once, when in the full blaze of his glory, he chose to sacrifice

Ludentis speciem dabit, et torquebitur, ut qui

NOTES:

to envy, in that devoted and execrable line, in one of the best translated books of the Odyssey,

“ Close to the Cliff with both his hands he clung,

“ And stuck adherent, and suspended hung.

The tribe of small wits and critics could never have supported themselves without the consolation of such a verse, to which they have ever since stuck adherent, and suspended hung. Shakespear afforded the Dunces of his time the same consolation, if we believe Ben Johnson, by his—Cæsar did never wrong but with just cause. But there is a sort of still lower Creatures, at the tail of which is one EDWARDS, who can make shift to subsist even on a Printer's blunder. The late Editor of Shakespear gave order to the corrector of the press, that all Mr. Pope's notes should be printed in their places. In one of these there was mention made, as they say, of some Italian novels (I forget whose) in which Dec. and Nov. were printed thus contractedly. But the printers of the late edition lengthened them into December and November, and, in this condition they are charged upon the Editor by this Edwards. Now, was the man such a Dunce to make his criticism with good faith, he is much to be pitied; was he such a Knave to make it without, he is much more to be pitied.

VER. 176. Then polish all, &c.] A celebrated French writer says—“ L'art d'être eloquent en vers est de tous les “ arts le plus difficile, et le plus rare. On trouvera mille “ Genies qui sçauront aranger un ouvrage, et le versifier “ d'une manière commune; mais le traiter en vrai Poete, “ c'est un talent qui est donné à trois ou quatre hommes “ sur la terre.

VER. 177. You think 'tis Nature, and a knack to please:]

Then polish all, with so much life and ease,
 You think 'tis nature, and a knack to please:
 " But ease in writing flows from Art, not chance;
 " As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.

NOTES.

The reason is because we are wont to give to nature every thing that is plain, easy, and simple; without reflecting, that that artificial ordonance of words and expression, from whence this ease arises, is the effect of much study and application. It is true, that study is commonly observed to destroy this very ease, which, we say, arises from it. It may, and will do so in a common writer; but never, in a genius. The precisely right expression is but one, while the meaning required may be tolerably conveyed in one hundred. But in such a croud, the search requires labour; and when you have hit upon the right, unless you have taste as well as judgment, you will never know, for certain, that it is the very thing you seek; so you go on till you are tired; and then the first that offers is received. Whereas a genius seizes it as soon as found, and never suffers the change to be put upon him by its counterfeit.

VER. 178. But ease in writing, &c.] That species of writers, which our Poet elsewhere calls

The mob of Gentlemen who wrote with ease, understood this quality of a poem to belong only to such as (a certain wit says) were easily written; whereas he supposes it to be the last and hardly attained perfection of a laboured work. But the Gentleman-writing, laughed at in the line above, and its opposite, which he somewhere calls prose run mad, are the two extremes of that perfect style, the idea of which he has here so well described from his own writings. As ease was the mode of the last age, which took Suckling for its pattern; so the imitation of Milton has introduced a pompous hardness into the affected writings of the present. Which last Character Quintilian describes

Praetulerim scriptor delirus inersque videri,
 Dum mea delectent mala me, vel denique fallant, Quam sapere, et fingi. Fuit haud ignobilis Argis, very justly, and accounts well for its success,—“ Evenit nonnunquam ut aliquid grande inveniatur, qui sem-per quaerit quod nimium est; verum et raro evenit, et caetera vitia non pensat.” I remember once, on reading a poem of this kind with Mr. Pope, where the Poet was always on the strain, and labouring for expression, he said pleasantly : This is a strange man : he seems to think with the Apothecaries, that Album grecum is better than an ordinary stool. He himself was never swelling or pompous : and if ever he inclined to hardness, it was not from attempting to say a common thing with magnificence, but from including a great deal in a little room.

VER. 184. There liv'd in primo Georgii, &c.] The imitation of this story of the Madman is as much superior to his original, in the fine and easy manner of telling, as that of Lucullus's Soldier comes short of it. It is true the turn Horace's madman took, agrees better with the subject of his Epistle, which is Poetry; and doubtless there were other beauties in it, which time has deprived us of.

9 If such the plague and pains to write by rule,
 Better (say I) be pleas'd, and play the fool;      181
 Call, if you will, bad rhyming a disease,
 It gives men happiness, or leaves them ease.
 There liv'd in primis Georgii (they record)
 A worthy member, no small fool, a Lord;      185
 Who, tho' the House was up, delighted fate,
 Heard, noted, answer'd, as in full debate:
 In all but this, a man of sober life,
 Fond of his Friend, and civil to his Wife;
 Not quite a mad-man, tho' a pasty fell;      180
 And much too wise to walk into a well.
 Him, the damn'd Doctors and his Friends immur'd;
 They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in short, they cur'd:

NOTES.

For it is in poetry as in painting, the most delicate touches go first; and, what is worse, they agree in this too, that they are last observed. So that, what between time and ill taste, the greatest beauties are the shortest lived. But we need not wonder that ancient satirists should feel the effects of this fatal union, when those noble ones of so modern a date as Rablais and Cervantes are so little understood. One of the finest strokes in the latter is in the plan of this famous Romance, which makes a Spanish Gentleman of fifty run mad with reading books of Chivalry. But we see little of its beauty, because we do not know that a disordered imagination is a common malady amongst Spanish Gentlemen in the decline of life. A fact which Thuanus occasionally informs us of, "Mendoza" étoit un fort habile homme, il avoit été employé en de grandes Ambassades.—sur la fin de ses jours il devint furieux, comme d'ordinaire les Espagnols. Thuanus.

SATIRES of Dr. DONNE.

THE manly Wit of Donne, which was the Character of his genius, suited best with Satire; and in this he excelled, tho' he wrote but little; six short poems being all we find amongst his writings of this sort. Mr. Pope has embellished two of them with his wit and harmony. He called it versifying them, because indeed the lines have nothing more of numbers than their being composed of a certain quantity of syllables. This is the more to be admired, because, as appears by his other poems, and especially from that fine one called the Progress of the Soul, his verse did not want harmony. But, I suppose, he took the sermoni propiora of Horace too seriously: or rather, was content with the character his master gives of Lucilius, Emunctae naris durus componere versus.

Having spoken of his Progress of the Soul, let me add, that Poetry never lost more than by his not pursuing and finishing that noble Design; of which he has only given us the Introduction. With regard to his Satires, it is almost as much to be lamented that Mr. Pope did not give us a Paraphrase, in his manner, of the Third, which treats the noblest subject not only of This, but, perhaps, of any satiric Poet. To supply this loss, tho' in a very small degree, I have here inserted it, in the versification of Dr. Parnell. It will at least serve to shew the force of Dr. Donne's genius, and of Mr. Pope's; by removing all that was rustic and shocking in the one, and not being able to reach a single grace of the other.

Compassion checks my spleen, yet Scorn denies
 The tears a passage thro' my swelling Eyes;
 To laugh or weep at sins might idly show
 Unheedful passion, or unfruitful woe.

Satire! arise, and try thy sharper ways, 5
 If ever Satire cur'd an old disease.

Is not Religion (Heav'n-descended dame)
 As worthy all our soul's devoutest flame,
 As Moral Virtue in her early fway,
 When the best Heathens saw by doubtful day? 10
 Are not the joys, the promis'd joys above,
 As great and strong to vanquish earthly love,
 As earthly glory, fame, respect, and show,
 As all rewards their virtue found below?
 Alas! Religion proper means prepares, 15
 These means are ours, and must its End be theirs?
 And shall thy Father's spirit meet the sight
 Of Heathen Sages cloath'd in heav'nly light,
 Whose Merit of strict life, severely suited
 To Reason's dictates, may be faith imputed? 20
 Whilst thou, to whom he taught the nearer road,
 Art ever banish'd from the blest abode.
 Oh! if thy temper such a fear can find,
 This fear were valour of the noblest kind.

Dar'st thou provoke, when rebel souls aspire, 25
 Thy Maker's Vengeance, and thy Monarch's Ire?
 Or live entomb'd in ships, thy leader's prey,
 Spoil of the war, the famine, or the sea?
 In search of pearl, in depth of ocean breathe,
 Or live, exil'd the sun, in mines beneath? 30
 Or, where in tempests icy mountains roll,
 Attempt a passage by the Northern pole?

Or dar'st thou parch within the fires of Spain,
Or burn beneath the line, for Indian gain?

Or for some Idol of thy Fancy draw      35

Some loose-gown'd-dame; O courage made of straw!

Thus, desp'rate Coward! would'st thou bold appear,

Yet when thy God has plac'd thee Centry here,

To thy own foes, to his, ignobly yield,

And leave, for wars forbid, th' appointed field?      40

Know thy own foes; th' Apostate Angel, he

You strive to please, the foremost of the Three;

He makes the pleasures of his realm the bait,

But can he give for Love, that acts in Hate?

The World's thy second Love, thy second Foe,      45

The World, whose beauties perish as they blow:

They fly, she fades herself, and at the best

You grasp a wither'd strumpet to your breast.

The Flesh is next, which in fruition wastes,

High flush'd with all the sensual joys it tastes,      50

While men the fair, the goodly Soul destroy,

From whence the flesh has pow'r to taste a joy.

Seek'st thou Religion, primitively found—

Well, gentle friend, but where may she be found?

By Faith Implicite blind Ignaro led,      55

Thinks the bright Seraph from his Country fled,

And seeks her seat at Rome, because we know

She there was seen a thousand years ago;

And loves her Relick rags, as men obey

The foot-cloth where the Prince sat yesterday.      60

These pageant Forms are whining Obed's scorn,
 Who seeks Religion at Geneva born,
 A fullen thing, whose coarseness suits the crowd ;
 Tho' young, unhandsome ; tho' unhandsome, proud :
 Thus, with the wanton, some perversely judge 65
 All girls unhealthy, but the Country drudge.

No foreign schemes make easy Cæpio roam,
 The man contented takes his Church at home ;
 Nay should some Preachers, servile bawds of gain,
 Should some new Laws, which like new-fashions reign,
 Command his faith to count Salvation ty'd. 71

To visit his, and visit none beside,
 He grants Salvation centers in his own,
 And grants it centers but in his alone :
 From youth to age he grasps the proffer'd dame, 75
 And they confer his Faith, who give his Name :
 So from the Guardian's hands, the Wards who live
 Entrall'd to Guardians, take the wives they give.

From all professions careless Airy flies,
 For, all professions can't be good, he cries, 80
 And here a fault, and there another views,
 And lives unfix'd for want of heart to chuse.
 So men, who know what some loose girls have done,
 For fear of marrying such, will marry none.

The Charms of all obsequious Courtly strike ; 85
 On each he doats, on each attends alike ;
 And thinks, as diff'rent countries deck the dame,
 The dresses altering, and the sex the same ;

So fares Religion, chang'd in outward show,
 But 'tis Religion still, where'er we go:
 This blindness springs from an excess of light,
 And men embrace the wrong to chuse the right.

But thou of force must one Religion own,
 And only one, and that the Right alone.
 To find that Right one, ask thy Rev'rend Sire; 95

Let him of his, and him of his enquire;
 Tho' Truth and Falshood seem as twins ally'd,
 There's Eldership on Truth's delightful side,
 Her seek with heed—who seeks the soundest First
 Is not of No Religion, nor the worst. 100

T' adore, or scorn an Image, or protest,
 May all be bad: doubt wisely for the best;
 'Twere wrong to sleep, or headlong run astray;
 It is not wand'ring, to inquire the way.

On a large mountain, at the Basis wide, 105
 Steep to the top, and craggy at the side,
 Sits sacred Truth enthron'd; and he who means
 To reach the summit, mounts with weary pains,
 Winds round and round, and ev'ry turn essays
 Where sudden breaks resist the shorter ways. 110

Yet labour so, that, ere faint age arrive,
 Thy searching soul possess her Rest alive;
 To work by twilight were to work too late,
 And Age is twilight to the night of fate.
 To will alone, is but to mean delay; 115
 To work at present is the use of day,

For man's employ much thought and deed remain,
 High Thoughts the Soul, hard deeds the body strain :
 And Myst'ries ask believing, which to View
 Like the fair Sun, are plain, but dazzling too. 120

Be Truth, so found, with sacred heed possess,
 Not Kings have pow'r to tear it from thy breast.
 By no blank Charters harm they where they hate,
 Nor are they Vicars, but the Hands of Fate.
 Ah ! fool and wretch, who let'st thy soul be ty'd 125
 To human Laws ! Or must it so be try'd ?

Or will it boot thee, at the latest day,
 When Judgment sits, and Justice asks thy plea,
 That Philip that, or Greg'ry taught thee this,
 Or John or Martin ? All may teach amiss : 130
 For, ev'ry contrary in each extrem

This holds alike, and each may plead the same.

Would'st thou to Pow'r a proper duty shew ?
 'Tis thy first task the bounds of pow'r to know ;
 The bounds once past, it holds the name no more, 135
 Its nature alters, which it own'd before,
 Nor were submission Humbleness exprest,
 But all a low Idolatry at best.

Pow'r, from above subordinately spread,
 Streams like a fountain from th' eternal head ; 140
There, calm and pure the living waters flow,
 But roar a Torrent or a Flood below ;
 Each flow'r, ordain'd the Margins to adorn,
 Each native Beauty from its roots is torn,

And left on Deserts, Rocks, and Sands, or tost 145
 All the long travel, and in Ocean lost :
 So fares the soul, which more that Pow'r reveres
 Man claims from God, than what in God inheres.

This noble Similitude, with which the Satire concludes, Dr. Parnell did not seem to understand, and so was not able to express, in its original force. Dr. Donne says,

“ As streams are, Pow'r is; those blest flow'rs that dwell
 “ At the rough Streams calm head, thrive, and do well;
 “ But having left their roots, and themselves given “ To the Streams tyrannous rage, alas, are driven “ Through mills, rocks, and woods, and at last, almost “ Consum'd in going, in the Sea are lost.
 “ So perish Souls, &c.

Dr. Donne compares Power or Authority to Streams; and Souls to Flowers; but not being so explicite in the latter, Dr. Parnell overlooked that part, and so has hurt the whole thought, by making the Flowers passive; whereas the Original says they leave their roots, and give themselves to the stream: that is, wilfully prefer human Authority to divine; and this makes them the object of his Satire; which they would not have been, were they irresistibly carried away, as the Imitation supposes.

S A T I R E II.

SIR, though (I thank God for it) I do hate
 Perfectly all this town; yet there's one state
 In all ill things, so excellently best,
 That hate towards them, breeds pity towards the rest.
 Though Poetry, indeed, be such a sin,
 As I think, that brings dearth and Spaniards in:
 Though like the pestilence, and old-fashion'd love,
 Ridlingly it catch men, and doth remove
 Never, till it be starv'd out; yet their state
 Is poor, disarm'd, like Papists, not worth hate.

One (like a wretch, which at barre judg'd as dead,
 Yet prompts him which stands next, and cannot read,
 And saves his life) gives Idiot Actors means;
 (Starving himself) to live by's labour'd scenes.
 As in some Organs, Puppits dance above,
 And bellows pant below, which them do move.
 One would move love by rythmes; but witchcraft's charms
 Bring not now their old fears, nor their old harms;

S A T I R E II.

Y E S ; thank my stars ! as early as I knew
 This Town, I had the sense to hate it too :
 Yet here, as ev'n in Hell, there must be still
 One Giant-Vice, so excellently ill,
 That all beside, one pities, not abhors ;
 As who knows Sappho, smiles at other whores.

I grant that Poetry's a crying sin ;
 It brought (no doubt) th' Excise and Army in :
 Catch'd like the Plague, or Love, the Lord knows how,

But that the cure is starving, all allow. 20
 Yet like the Papist's, is the Poet's state,
 Poor and disarm'd, and hardly worth your hate !

Here a lean Bard, whose wit could never give Himself a dinner, makes an Actor live :

The Thief condemn'd, in law already dead, 15
 So prompts, and saves a rogue who cannot read.

Thus as the pipes of some carv'd Organ move,
 The gilded puppets dance and mount above.

Heav'd by the breath th' inspiring bellows blow :

Th' inspiring bellows lie and pant below. 20

One sings the Fair ; but songs no longer move ;
 No rat is rhym'd to death, nor maid to love :

Rams, and slings now are silly battery,
 Pistolets are the best artillery.
 And they who write to Lords, rewards to get,
 Are they not like fingers at doors for meat?
 And they who write, because all write, have still
 That 'scape for writing, and for writing ill.

But he is worst, who beggarly doth chaw
 Others wits fruits, and in his ravenous maw
 Rankly digested, doth these things out-spue,
 As his own things; and they're his own, 'tis true,
 For if one eat my meat, though it be known
 The meat was mine, the excrement's his own.

But these do me no harm, nor they which use,
 . . . . . to out-usure Jews,
 T' out-drink the sea, t' out-swear the Letanie,
 Who with sins all kinds as familiar be
 As Confessors, and for whose sinful sake
 Schoolmen new tenements in hell must make;
 Whose 'strange sins Canonists could hardly tell
 In which Commandment's large receipt they dwell.

NOTES.

VER. 38. Irishmen outswear] The Original says, outswear the Letanie.

Improved by the Imitator to a just stroke of Satire. Dr.
 Donne's is a low allusion to a licentious quibble used, at that time, by the enemies of the English Liturgy, who

In love's, in nature's spite, the siege they hold,
And scorn the flesh, the dev'l, and all but gold.

These write to Lords, some mean reward to get,
As needy beggars sing at doors for meat.

Those write because all write, and so have still Excuse for writing, and for writing ill.

Wretched indeed ! but far more wretched yet
Is he who makes his meal on others wit : 30

'Tis chang'd, no doubt, from what it was before,
His rank digestion makes it wit no more :
Sense, past thro' him, no longer is the same ;
For food digested takes another name.

I pass o'er all those Confessors and Martyrs 35
Who live like S—tt—n, or who die like Chartres,

Out-cant old Esdras, or out-drink his heir,
Out-usure Jews, or Irishmen out-swear ;

Wicked as Pages, who in early years
Act sins which Prisca's Confessor scarce hears. 40

—Ev'n those I pardon, for whose sinful sake
Schoolmen new tenements in hell must make ;

Of whose strange crimes no Canonist can tell
In what Commandment's large contents they dwell.

N O T E S.

disliking the frequent invocations in the Letanie, called them the taking God's Name in vain, which is the Scripture periphrasis for swearing.

VER. 44. In what Commandment's large contents they dwell. ]
The Original is more humorous,

In which Commandment's large receipt they dwell.

But these punish themselves. The insolence
 Of Coscus, only, breeds my just offence,
 Whom time (which rots all, and makes botches pox,
 And plodding on, must make a calf an ox)
 Hath made a Lawyer; which (alas) of late;
 But scarce a Poet: jollier of this state,
 Than are new-benefic'd Ministers, he throws,
 Like nets or lime-twigs, wheresoe'er he goes
 His title of Barrister on ev'ry wench,
 And woos in language of the Pleas and Bench. * *

Words, words which would tear
 The tender labyrinth of a Maid's soft ear:
 More, more than ten Sclavonians scolding, more
 Than when winds in our ruin'd Abbyes roar.

NOTES.

As if the Ten Commandments were so wide, as to stand ready to receive every thing within them, that either the Law of Nature or the Gospel commands. A just ridicule on those practical-Commentators, as they are called, who include all moral and religious Duties within them. Whereas their true original sense is much more confined, being a short summary of duty fitted for a single People, upon a particular occasion, and to serve transitory ends.

VER. 61. Language, which Boreas—] The Original has here a very fine stroke of satire,

Than when winds in our ruin'd Abbyes roar.

One, one man only breeds my just offence; 45
Whom crimes gave wealth, and wealth gave Impudence:

Time, that at last matures a clap to pox,
Whose gentle progress makes a calf an ox,
And brings all natural events to pass,

Hath made him an Attorney of an Afs. 50

No young divine, new-benefic'd, can be
More pert, more proud, more positive than he.

What further could I wish the fop to do

But turn a wit, and scribble verses too?

Pierce the soft lab'rinth of a Lady's ear 55

With rhymes of this per cent. and that per year?

Or court a Wife, spread out his wily parts,

Like nets or lime-twigs, for rich Widows hearts;

Call himself Barrister to ev'ry wench,

And woe in language of the Pleas and Bench? 60

Language, which Boreas might to Auster hold

More rough than forty Germans when they scold.

N O T E S.

The frauds with which that work (so necessary for the welfare both of religion and the state) was begun; the rapine with which it was carried on; and the dissoluteness in which the plunder arising from it was wasted, had scandalized all sober men; and disposed the best Protestants to wish, that some part of that immense wealth, arising from the suppression of the Monasteries, had been reserved for Charity, Hospitality, and even for the public service of Religion.

Then sick with Poetry, and possess'd with Muse

 His hand still at a bill ; now he must talk
 Idly, like prisoners, which whole months will swear,
 That only suretyship hath brought them there,
 And to every suitor lye in every thing,
 Like a King's Favourite---or like a King.
 Like a wedge in a block, wring to the barre,
 Bearing like asses, and more shameless farre
 Than carted whores, lye to the grave Judge ; for Bastardy abounds not in King's titles, nor Simony and Sodomy in Church-men's lives,
 As these things do in him ; by these he thrives.

NOTES.

<sup>a</sup> He speaks here of those illiberal Advocates who frequent the Bar for mere gain, without any purpose of promoting or advancing civil justice ; the consequence of which, he tells us, is a slavish attendance, together with the degradation of their parts and abilities. So that when they undertake to excuse the bad conduct of their client, they talk as idly, and are heard with the same contempt, as debtors, whose common cant is, that they were undone by Suretiship. The Imitator did not seem to take the fineness of the satire, or he would not have neglected an abuse of this importance, to fall upon such paultry things as Peter, and those whom Peter considered (and so used) as his patrimony.

Shortly (as th' sea) he'll compass all the land,
 From Scots to Wight, from Mount to Dover strand.
 And spying heirs melting with Luxury,
Satan will not joy at their sins as he :
 For (as a thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuffe,
 And barrelling the droppings, and the snuffe
 Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
 Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding chear)
 Piecemeal he gets lands, and spends as much time
 Wringing each acre, as maids pulling prime.
 In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws,
 So huge that men (in our times forwardness)
 Are Fathers of the Church for writing less.
 These he writes not ; nor for these written payes,
 Therefore spares no length (as in those first dayes
 When Luther was profess'd, he did desire
 Short Pater-nosters, saying as a Fryer
 Each day his Beads ; but having left those laws, Adds to Christ's prayer, the Power and Glory clause)
 But when he sells or changes land, h' impaires
 The writings, and (unwatch'd) leaves out, ses heires,
 As sily as any Commenter goes by Hard words, or sense ; or, in Divinity
 As controverters in vouch'd Texts, leave out
 Shrewd words, which might against them clear the doubt.

'Till, like the Sea, they compass all the land,                    85
From Scots to Wight, from Mount to Dover strand:
And when rank Widows purchase luscious nights,
Or when a Duke to Jansen punts at White's,
Or City-heir in mortgage melts away ;
Satan himself feels far less joy than they.                    90
Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that,
Glean on, and gather up the whole estate.
Then strongly fencing ill-got wealth by law,
Indentures, Cov'nants, Articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far                    95
Than Civil Codes, with all their Glosses, are ;
So vast, our new Divines, we must confess,
Are Fathers of the Church for writing less.
But let them write for you, each rogue impairs
The deeds, and dextrously omits, ses heires :                    100
No Commentator can more slyly pass
O'er a learn'd, unintelligible place ;
Or, in quotation, shrewd Divines leave out
Those words, that would against them clear the doubt.
So Luther thought the Pater-noster long,                    105
When doom'd to say his beads and Even-song ;
But having cast his cowle, and left those laws,
Adds to Christ's pray'r, the Pow'r and Glory clause.

the legal instruments for conveying property to the bigness of gloſs'd civil Laws, when it is to ſecure his own ill-got wealth. But let the ſame Lawyer convey property for you, and he then omits even the neceſſary words; and becomes as concise and haſty as the looſe poſtils of a modern Divine. So Luther while a Monk, and, by his Inſtitution, obliged to ſay Maſs, and pray in perſon for others, thought even his Pater-noſter too long. But when he ſet up for a Governor in the Church, and his buſineſs was to direct others how to pray for the ſucceſs of his new Model; he then lengthened the Pater-noſter by a new clause. This representation of the firſt part of his conduct was to ridicule his want of devotion; as the other, where he tells us, that the addition was the power and glory clause; was to ſatirize his ambition; and both together to inſinuate that, from a Monk, he was become totally ſecularized.—About this time of his life Dr. Donne had a ſtrong propenſity to

 Well, I could wish, that still in lordly domes 115
 Some beasts were kill'd, tho' not whole hetacombs ;

Popery, which appears from several strokes in these satires. We find amongst his works, a short satirical thing called a Catalogue of rare books, one article of which is intitled, M. Lutherus de abbreviatione Orationis Dominicæ, alluding to Luther's omission of the concluding Doxology, in his two Catechisms, which shews he was fond of the joke ; and, in the first instance (for the sake of his moral) at the expence of truth. As his putting Erasmus and Reuchlin in the rank of Lully and Agrippa shews what were then his sentiments of Reformation. I will only observe, that this Catalogue was written in imitation of Rabelais's famous Catalogue of the Library of St. Victor. It is one of the finest strokes in that extravagant satire (which was then the Manual of the Wits) and so became the subject of much imitation ; the best of which are this of Dr. Donne's and one of Sir Thomas Brown's.

VER. 120. These as good works, &c.] Dr. Donne says,

NOTES.

But (oh) we allow

Good works as good, but out of fashion now.

The popish Doctrine of good works was one of those abuses of Religion which the Church of England condemns in its Articles. To this the Poet's words satirically allude. And having throughout this satire had several flings at the Reformation, which it was penal, and then very dangerous,

Like rich old wardrobes, things extremely rare,
Extremely fine, but what no man will wear.

The Gentlemen of the Dunciad maintain, that he fell by the keen pen of our redoubtable Laureat. We ourselves should be inclined to this latter opinion, for the sake of ornamenting his story; and that we might be able to say, that he died, like his immortal namesake, Alexander the Great, by a drug of so deadly cold a nature, that, as Plutarch and other grave writers tell us, it could be contained in nothing but the

VER. 7. The Poet's hell,] He has here with great prudence corrected the licentious expression of his Original.

VER. 10. Nor the vain itch t'admire, or be admir'd;] Courtiers have the same pride in admiring, that Poets have in being admired. For Vanity is as often gratified in paying our court to our superiors, as in receiving it from our inferiors.

VER. 13. Had no new verses, nor new suit to show;] Insinuating that Poetry and new clothes only come to Court, in honour of the Sovereign, and only serve to supply a day's conversation.

To Mafs in jeft, catch'd, was fain to difburfe

Therefore I fuffer'd this; towards me did run

But, as the Fool that in reforming days 15

 Could not but think, to pay his fine was odd,
 Since 'twas no form'd design of serving God ;
 So was I punish'd, as if full as proud
 As prone to ill, as negligent of good, 20
 As deep in debt, without a thought to pay,
 As vain, as idle, and as false, as they
 Who live at Court, for going once that way !
 Scarce was I enter'd, when, behold ! there came
 A thing which Adam had been pos'd to name ; 25
 Noah had refus'd it lodging in his Ark,
 Where all the Race of Reptiles might embark :
 A verier monster, than on Africk's shore

See it plain rash a while, then nought at all.

The thing hath travail'd, and, faith, speaks all tongues,

And only knoweth what to all States belongs,
Made of th' accents, and best phrase of all these,
He speaks one language. If strange meats displease,
Art can deceive, or hunger force my tast;
But pedants motly tongue, soldiers bumbast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this, yet I must be content
With his tongue, in his tongue call'd Complement:
In which he can win widows, and pay scores,
Make men speak treason, couzen subtlest whores,
Out-flatter favourites, or out-lie either
Jovius, or Surlius, or both together.

He names me, and comes to me; I whisper, God,
How have I sinn'd, that thy wrath's furious Rod,
This fellow, chuseth me! He saith, Sir,
I love your judgment, whom do you prefer
For the best Linguist? and I feelily

But mere tuff-taffety what now remain'd ;
 So Time, that changes all things, had ordain'd !
 Our sons shall see it leisurely decay,
 First turn plain rash, then vanish quite away. 45

This thing has travel'd, speaks each language too,
 And knows what's fit for ev'ry state to do ;
 Of whose best phrase and courtly accent join'd,
 He forms one tongue, exotic and refin'd.
 Talkers I've learn'd to bear ; Motteux I knew, 50
 Henley himself I've heard, and Budgel too.
 The Doctor's Wormwood style, the Hash of tongues.
 A Pedant makes, the storm of Gonson's lungs,
 The whole Artill'ry of the terms of War,
 And (all those plagues in one) the bawling Bar : 55
 These I could bear ; but not a rogue so civil,
 Whose tongue will compliment you to the devil.
 A tongue, that can cheat widows, cancel scores,
 Make Scots speak treason, cozen subtlest whores,
 With royal Favourites in flatt'ry vie, 60
 And Oldmixon and Burnet both out-lie.

He spies me out ; I whisper, Gracious God !
 What sin of mine could merit such a rod ?
 That all the shot of dulness now must be
 From this thy blunderbuss discharg'd on me ! 65
 Permit (he cries) no stranger to your fame
 To crave your sentiment, if —'s your name.
 What Speech esteem you most ? “ The King's, said I.”
 But the best words ? — “ O Sir, the Dictionary.”

Nay, but of men, most sweet Sir? Beza then,
 Some Jesuits, and two reverend men
 Of our two academies I nam'd. Here
 He stopt me, and said, Nay your Apostles were Good pretty Linguists; so Panurgus was,
 Yet a poor Gentleman; all these may pass
 By travail. Then, as if he would have sold
 His tongue, he prais'd it, and such wonders told,
 That I was fain to say, If you had liv'd, Sir,
 Time enough to have been Interpreter
 To Babel's Bricklayers, sure the Tower had stood.

He adds, If of Court life you knew the good,
 You would leave loneness. I said, Not alone

VER. 78. Yet these were all poor Gentlemen!] Our Poet has here added to the humour of his original. Donne makes his thread-bare Traveller content himself under his poverty with the reflection that Panurge himself, the great Traveller and Linguist in Rabelais, went a begging.

To teach by painting drunkards doth not last
 Now, Aretines pictures have made few chaste;
 No more can Princes Courts (though there be few Better pictures of vice) teach me virtue.

He like to a high-stretcht Lute-string squeaks, O
 Sir,

'Tis sweet to talk of Kings. At Westminster,
 Said I, the man that keeps the Abby tombs,
 And for his price, doth with whoever comes
 Of all our Harrys, and our Edwards talk,
 From King to King, and all their kin can walk:
 Your ears shall hear nought but Kings; your eyes meet

Kings only: The way to it is Kings-street.

He smack'd, and cry'd, He's base, mechanic, coarse,

So are all your Englishmen in their discourse.

Are not your Frenchmen neat? Mine, as you see
 I have but one, Sir, look, he follows me.

Certes they are neatly cloath'd. I of this mind am,
 Your only wearing is your Grogaram.

Not so, Sir, I have more. Under this pitch
 He would not fly; I chaf'd him: but as Itch

And as for Courts, forgive me, if I say
 No lessons now are taught the Spartan way,
 Tho' in his pictures Lust be full display'd,
 Few are the Converts Aretine has made : 95
 And tho' the Court show Vice exceeding clear,
 None should, by my advice, learn Virtue there.

At this entranc'd, he lifts his hands and eyes,
 Squeaks like a high-stretch'd lutestring, and replies,
 " Oh 'tis the sweetest of all earthly things 100
 " To gaze on Princes, and to talk of Kings !
 Then, happy Man who shows the Tombs ! said I,
 He dwells amidst the royal Family ;
 He ev'ry day from King to King can walk,
 Of all our Harries, all our Edwards talk, 105
 And get by speaking truth of monarchs dead,
 What few can of the living, Ease and Bread.
 " Lord, Sir, a meer Mechanic ; strangely low,
 " And coarse of phrase,—your English all are so.
 " How elegant your Frenchmen ?" Mine, d'ye mean ?
 I have but one, I hope the fellow's clean. 111
 " Oh ! Sir, politely so ! nay, let me die,
 " Your only wearing is your Padua-foy."
 Not, Sir, my only, I have better still,
 And this you see is but my dishabille— 115
 Wild to get loose, his Patience I provoke, Mistake, confound, object at all he spoke.
 But as coarse iron, sharpen'd, mangles more,
 And itch most hurts when anger'd to a fore ;

Scratch'd into smart, and as blunt Iron ground
 Into an edge, hurts worfe : So, I (fool) found,
 Crossing hurt me. To fit my fullness,
 He to another key his ftyle doth drefs ;
 And asks what news ; I tell him of new playes,
 He takes my hand, and as a Still, which ftayes
 A Sembrief 'twixt each drop, he niggardly,
 As loth t' enrich me, fo tells many a ly.
 More then ten Hollensheads, or Halls, or Stows,
 Of trivial houfhould trash : He knows, he knows
 When the Queen frown'd or fmil'd, and he knows what
 A fubtle Statesman may gather of that ;
 He knows who loves whom ; and who by poifon
 Haft to an office's reverfion ;
 Who wafes in meat, in clothes, in horfe, he notes,
 Who loveth whores . . . . .
 He knows who hath fold his land, and now doth beg
 A licence, old iron, boots, fhoes, and egge-
 Shells to transport ;

A subtle Minister may make of that:

Who sins with whom: who got his Pension rug,
Or quicken'd a Reversion by a drug:            135

by this he means Monopolies, the most unpopular abuse of power of his time. It continued down thro' the reigns of Elizabeth, James, and Charles I. to the breaking out of the civil war. In the year 1633 the four bodies of the Law entertained the Court with a magnificent Mask. And one of their Anti-masks was an ingenious ridicule on the abuse of Monopolies ; which Mr. Whitlock thus describes : “ In this Anti-masque of Projectors (says he) “ came a Fellow with a bunch of Carrots on his head, “ and a Capon upon his fist, describing a Projector who “ begg'd a patent of Monopoly as the first inventor of the “ art to feed Capons fat with Carrots, and that none but “ himself might make use of that invention, &c. Several “ other projectors were in like manner personated in this “ Anti-masque ; and it pleased the spectators the more, “ because by it an information was covertly given to the “ king of the unfitness and ridiculousness of these projects “ against the Law ; and the Attorney Noy, who had most “ knowledge of them, had a great hand in this Anti- “ masque of the Projectors.” This exorbitancy was become so common and fashionable, that Ben Johnson makes a cheating Procurer of Monopolies the chief character in one of his plays ; just as he had done a cheating Alchymist in another.

VER. 151. What Lady's face &c.] The Original is here very humorous. This torrent of scandal concludes thus,

And wiser than all us

He knows what Lady

the reader expects it will conclude,—what Lady is painted.
 No, just the contrary,

what Lady is not painted, satirically insinuating, that that is a better Proof of the goodness of his intelligence than the other. The Reader sees there is greater force in the use of these plain words, than in those which the Imitator employs. And the reason is, because the satire does not turn upon the odiousness of painting ; in which case the terms of a painted wall had given force to the expression ; but upon the frequency of it, which required only the simple mention of the thing.

VER. 152. As one of Woodward's patients,] Alluding to the effects of his use of oils in bilious disorders.

 He names the price of ev'ry office paid;
 He saith our wars thrive ill because delaid;
 That Offices are intail'd, and that there are Perpetuities of them, lasting as far
 As the last day; and that great Officers
 Do with the Spaniards share and Dunkirkers.

formation is strongly and finely painted to the imagination, not in the sound, but in the sense of these two words.

Of mercy now was come : he tries to bring
 Me to pay a fine, to 'scape a torturing,
 And says, Sir, can you spare me—? I said, Willingly ;
 Nay, Sir, can you spare me a crown? Thankfully I Gave it, as ransom ; but as fidlers, still,
 Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jugg upon you : so did he
 With his long complimentary thanks vex me.
 But he is gone, thanks to his needy want,
 And the Prerogative of my Crown ; scant
 His thanks were ended, when I (which did see All the Court fill'd with more strange things than he) Ran from thence with such, or more hast than one
 Who fears more actions, doth hast from prison,

At home in wholesome solitariness
 My piteous soul began the wretchedness
 Of suiters at court to mourn, and a trance
 Like his, who dreamt he saw hell, did advance
 It self o'er me : such men as he saw there
 I saw at court and worse and more. Low fear Becomes the guilty, not th' accuser : Then,
 Shall I, none's slave, of high-born or rais'd men

NOTES.

VER. 184. Bear me,] These four lines are wonderfully sublime. His impatience in this region of vice, is like that of Virgil, in the region of beat. They both call out as if they were half stifled by the sulphury air of the place,

O qui me gelidis—

O quickly bear me hence,

Not Fannius' self more impudently near,
 When half his nose is in his Prince's ear.
 I quak'd at heart ; and still afraid, to see            180
 All the Court fill'd with stranger things than he,
 Ran out as fast, as one that pays his bail
 And dreads more actions, hurries from a jail.

Bear me, some God ! oh quickly bear me hence
 To wholesome Solitude, the nurse of sense :            185
 Where Contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
 And the free soul looks down to pity Kings !
 There sober thought pursu'd th' amusing theme,
 Till Fancy colour'd it, and form'd a Dream.
 A Vision hermits can to Hell transport,            190
 And forc'd ev'n me to see the damn'd at Court.
 Not Dante dreaming all th' infernal state,
 Beheld such scenes of envy, sin, and hate.
 Base Fear becomes the guilty, not the free ;
 Suits Tyrants, Plunderers, but suits not me :            195
 Shall I, the terror of this sinful town,
 Care, if a liv'ry'd Lord or smile or frown ?
 Who cannot flatter, and detest who can,
 Tremble before a noble Serving-man ?

 Go, through the great chamber (why is it hung With the seven deadly sins?) being among
 Those Askaparts<sup>b</sup>, men big enough to throw
Charing-Cross for a bar, men that do know
 No token of worth, but Queens man, and fire
 Living; barrels of beef, flaggons of wine.
 I shook like a spied Spie—Preachers which are Seas of Wit and Arts, you can, then dare,
 Drown the sins of this place, but as for me
 Which am but a scant brook, enough shall be
 To wash the stains away: Although I yet

VARIATIONS.

P. Sir, what I write, should be correctly writ.

F. Correct! 'tis what no genius can admit.

Besides, you grow too moral for a Wit.

NOTES.

VER. 9. And taught his Romans in much better metre, "To laugh at Fools who put their trust in Peter."] The general turn of the thought is from Boileau,

Avant lui, Juvénal avoit dit en Latin,

Qu'on est assis à l'aise aux sermons de Cotin.

But the irony in the first line, and the satirical equivoque in the second, mark them for his own. His making the objector say, that Horace excelled him in writing verse, is pleasant. And the ambiguity of putting their trust in Peter, insinuates that Horace and he had frequently laughed at that specific folly, arising from indolence, which still disposes men to intrust their spiritual and temporal concerns to the absolute disposal of any sanctified or un sanctified cheat, bearing the name of PETER.

VER. 12. Bubo observes,] Some guilty person very fond of making such an observation. P.

NOTES.

VER. 26. The Great man] A phrase, by common use, appropriated to the first minister. P.

VER. 29. Seen him I have, &c.] This and other strokes of commendation in the following poem, as well as his regard to him on all occasions, were in acknowledgment of a certain service the Minister had done a Priest at Mr. Pope's solicitation. Our Poet, when he was about seventeen, had a very ill fever in the country, which, it was feared, would end fatally. In this condition, he wrote to Southcot, a Priest of his acquaintance, then in town, to take his last leave of him. Southcot with great affection and sollicitude applied to Dr. Radcliffe for his advice. And not content with that, he rode down post, to Mr. Pope, who was then an hundred miles from London, with the Doctor's directions ; which had the desired effect. A long time after this, Southcot, who had an interest in the Court of France, writing to a common acquaintance in England, informed him that there was a good abbey near Avignon, which he had credit enough to get, were it not from an apprehension that his promotion would give umbrage to the English Court, to which he (Southcot) by his intrigues in the Pretender's service, was become very obnoxious. The person to whom this was written happening to acquaint Mr. Pope with the case, he immediately wrote to Sir Robert Walpole about it ; begged that this embargo might be taken off ; and acquainted him with the grounds of solicitation : That he was indebted to Southcot for his life, and he must discharge his obligation, either here or in purgatory. The Minister received the application favourably, and with much good-nature wrote to his brother, then in France, to remove this obstruction. In consequence of which Southcot got the abbey. Mr. Pope ever after retained a grateful sense of his civility.

VER. 31. Seen him uncumber'd] These two verses were originally in the poem, though omitted in all the first editions.

P.

VER. 34. what he thinks mankind.] This request seems somewhat absurd: but not more so than the principle it refers to. That great Minister, it seems, thought all mankind Rogues; and that every one had his price. It was usually given as a proof of his penetration, and extensive knowledge of the world. Others perhaps would think it an instance of a narrow understanding, that, from a few of Rochefaucault's maxims, and the corrupt practice of those he commonly conversed with, would thus boldly pronounce upon the character of his Species. It is certain, that a Keeper of Newgate, who should make the same conclusion, would be heartily laughed at.

VER. 37. Why yes: with Scripture, &c.] A scribler, whose only chance for reputation is the falling in with the fashion, is apt to employ this infamous expedient for the preservation of his fleeting existence. But a true Genius could not do a foolisher thing, or sooner defeat his

He was a nobleman of Piedmont, banished from his country for his impieties, and lived in the utmost misery, yet feared to practise his own precepts; of which there went a pleasant story about that time. Amongst his pupils, it seems, to whom he read in moral philosophy, was a noted Gamester, who lodged under the same roof with him. This useful citizen, after a run of ill luck, came one morning early into his master's bed-chamber with two loaded pistols. And, as Englishmen do not understand raillery in a case of this nature, told the philosopher, on presenting him with one of his pistols,

VER. 135. Let humble ALLEN with an aukward Shame—Do good by stealth, and blush to find it Fame.] The true Character of our Author's moral pieces, considered as a supplement to human laws (the force of which they have deservedly obtained) is, that his praise is always delicate, and his reproof never misplaced: and therefore the first not reaching the head, and the latter too sensibly touching the heart of his vulgar readers, have made him censured as a cold Panegyrist, and a caustic Satirist; whereas, indeed, he was the warmest friend, and the most placable enemy.

The lines above have been commonly given as an instance of this ungenerous backwardness in doing justice to merit. And, indeed, if fairly given, would bear hard upon the Author, who believed the person here celebrated to be one of the greatest characters in private life that ever was; and known by him to be, in fact, all, and much more than he had feigned in the imaginary virtues of the man of Ross. One, who, whether he be considered in his civil, social, domestic, or religious character, is, in all these views, an ornament to human nature.

And, indeed, we shall see, that what is here said of him agrees only with such a Character. But as both the thought and the expression have been censured, we shall consider them in their order.

Let humble ALLEN, with an aukward Shame,
 Do good by stealth—

Virtue may chuse the high or low Degree,
'Tis just alike to Virtue, and to me ;

N O T E S.

This encomium has been called obscure (as well as penurious.) It may be so ; not from any defect in the conception, but from the deepness of the sense ; and, what may seem more strange, (as we shall see afterwards) from the elegance of phrase, and exactness of expression. We are so absolutely governed by custom, that to act contrary to it, creates even in virtuous men, who are ever modest, a kind of diffidence, which is the parent of Shame. But when, to this, there is joined a consciousness that, in forsaking custom ; you follow truth and reason, the indignation arising from such a conscious virtue, mixing with shame, produces that amiable awkwardness, in going out of the fashion, which the Poet, here, celebrates :

and blush to find it Fame,

i. e. He blushed at the degeneracy of his times, which, at best, gave his goodness its due commendation (the thing he never aimed at) instead of following and imitating his example, which was the reason why some acts of it were not done by stealth, but more openly.

So far as to the thought : but it will be said, tantamne rem tam negligenter ?

And this will lead us to say something concerning the expression, which will clear up what remains of the difficulty. These lines, and those which precede and follow them, contain an ironical neglect of Virtue, and an ironical concern and care for Vice. So that the Poet's elegant correctness of composition required, that his language, in the first case, should present something of negligence and censure ; which is admirably implied in the expression of the thought.

VER. 138. 'Tis just alike, to Virtue and to me :] He gives the reason for it, in the line that presently follows,

Dwell in a Monk, or light upon a King,
 She's still the same, belov'd, contented thing. 140
Vice is undone, if she forgets her Birth,
 And stoops from Angels to the Dregs of Earth :
 But 'tis the Fall degrades her to a Whore ;
 Let Greatness own her, and she's mean no more,

NOTES.

She's still the same, below'd, contented thing.

 " tue on whom her influence falls, whether on high or
 " low, because it still produces the same effect, their con-
 " tent ; and it is all one to me, because it still produces
 " the same effect, my love."

VER. 144. Let Greatness own her, and she's mean no more,]
 The Poet, in this whole passage, would be understood to allude to a very extraordinary story told by Procopius in his Secret history : the sum of which is as follows.

The Empress THEODORA was the daughter of one Acaces, who had the care of the wild beasts, which the Green faction kept for the entertainment of the people. For the Empire was, at that time, divided between the two Factions of the Green and Blue. But Acaces dying in the infancy of Theodora, and her two Sisters, his place of Master of the Bears was disposed of to a stranger : and his widow had no other way of supporting herself than by prostituting her three Daughters, who were all very pretty, on the public Theatre. Thither she brought them in their turns as they came to years of puberty. Theodora first attended her Sisters in the habit and quality of a slave. And when it came to her turn to mount the stage, as she could neither dance, nor play on the flute, she was put into the lowest class of Buffoons to make diversion for the Rabble ; which she did in so arch a manner, and complained of the indignities she suffered in so ridiculous a tone, that she became the absolute favourite of the people. After a complete course of infamy and prostitution, the next place we hear of her is at Alexandria, in great poverty and distress : from whence (as it was no wonder) she was willing to remove. And to Constantinople she came, but after a large circuit thro' the East, where she worked her way, by a free course of prostitution. JUSTINIAN was at this time consort in the Empire with his Uncle Justin, and the management of affairs entirely in his hands. He no sooner saw Theodora than he fell desperately in love with her, and would have married her immediately, but that the Empress Euphemia, a barbarian, and unpolite, but not illiberal in her nature, was then alive. And she, altho' she rarely denied him any thing, yet obstinately refused giving him this instance of her complaisance. But she did not live long : and then nothing but the ancient Laws, which forbad a senator to marry with a common prostitute, hindered Justinian from executing this extraordinary project. These, he obliged Justin to revoke ; and then, in the face of the sun, married his dear Theodora. A terrible example (says the Historian) and an encouragement to the most shameless licence. And now no sooner was THEODORA (in the Poet's phrase) owned by Greatness, than she, whom not long before it was thought unlucky to meet, and a pollution to touch, became the idol of the Court. There was not a single Magistrate (says Procopius) that expressed the least indignation at the shame and dishonour brought upon the state ; not a single Prelate that shewed the least desolation for the public scandal. They all drove to court so precipitately, as if they were striving to prevent one another in her good graces. Nay, the very soldiers were emulous of the honour of becoming the Champions of her Virtue. As for the common people, who had so long been the spectators of her servility, her Buffoonry, and her Prostitution, they all in a body threw themselves at her feet, as slaves at the footstool of their Mistresses. In a word, there was no man, of what condition soever, that shewed the least dislike of so monstrous an elevation. In the mean time, Theodora's first care was to fill her Coffers, which she soon did, with immense wealth. To this end, Justinian and she pretended to differ in their principles. The one protected the blue, and the other, the green faction; till in a long course of intrigue, by sometimes giving up the one to plunder and confiscation, and sometimes the other, they left nothing to either party. See Procop. Anec. c. ix.—x.

SATIRES.

Written in MDCCLXXXVIII.

DIALOGUE II.

FR.

'TIS all a Libel—Paxton (Sir) will say.

P. Not yet, my Friend ! to morrow faith
it may ;

And for that very cause I print to day,

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,

In rev'ence to the Sins of Thirty nine !

Vice with such Giant strides comes on amain,

Invention strives to be before in vain ;

Feign what I will, and paint it e'er so strong,

Some rising Genius fins up to my Song.

NOTES.

VER. 1. Paxton] Late solicitor to the Treasury.

VER. 8. Feign what I will, &c.] The Poet has here introduced an oblique apology for himself with great art. You attack personal characters, say his enemies. No replies he, I paint merely from my invention ; and, to prevent a likeness, I then aggravate the features. But alas!

F. Yet none but you by Name the guilty lash; 10
 Ev'n Guthry saves half Newgate by a Dash.
 Spare then the Person, and expose the Vice.

P. How, Sir! not damn the Sharper, but the Dice?
 Come on then, Satire! gen'ral, unconfin'd,
 Spread thy broad wing, and souce on all the kind. 15
 Ye Statesmen, Priests, of one Religion all!
 Ye Tradefmen, vile, in Army, Court, or Hall!
 Ye Rev'rend Atheists. F. Scandal! name them, Who?

P. Why that's the thing you bid me not to do.
 Who starv'd a Sister, who forswore a Debt, 20
 I never nam'd; the Town's enquiring yet.
 The pois'ning Dame—F. You mean—P. I don't.
 F. You do.

P. See, now I keep the Secret, and not you!
 The bribing Statesman—F. Hold, too high you go.

P. The brib'd Elector—F. There you stoop too low.

NOTES.

VER. 11. Ev'n Guthry] The Ordinary of Newgate, who publishes the memoirs of the Malefactors, and is often prevailed upon to be so tender of their reputation, as to set down no more than the initials of their name. P.

VER. 13. How, Sir! not damn the Sharper, but the Dice!] The liveliness of the reply may excuse the bad reasoning; otherwise the dice, tho' they rhyme to vice, can never stand for it, which his argument requires they should do. For the dice are only the instruments of fraud; but the question is not, whether the instrument, but whether the act committed by it, should be exposed, instead of the person.

P. I fain would please you, if I knew with what ; 26
 Tell me, which Knaue is lawful Game, which not ?
 Must great Offenders, once escap'd the Crown,
 Like Royal Harts, be never more run down ?

NOTES.

VER. 26. I fain would please you, if I knew with what ;—
Tell me, which Knaue is lawful Game, which not ?] I have observed, that our author has invented, and introduced into his writings, a new species of the sublime, by heightening it with wit. There is a species of elegance in his works (of which these lines are an instance) almost as peculiar to him, which he has produced by employing the simplest and tritest phrases to prevent stiffness, and yet, by a supreme effort of his art, giving them the dignity of the choicest.
 Quintilian was so sensible of the lustre which this throws upon true eloquence under a masterly direction, and of the prejudices against it from the difficulty of succeeding in it ;
 that he says, Utinam—et verba in usu quotidiano posita minus timeremus.

VER. 28. Must great Offenders, &c.] The case is archly put. Those who escape public justice being the particular property of the Satirist.

VER. 29. Like Royal Harts, &c.] Alluding to the old Game-laws, when our Kings spent all the time they could spare from human slaughter, in Woods and Forests.

VER. 31. As Beasts of Nature may we hunt the Squires ?]
 The expression is rough, like the subject, but no reflection :
 For if beasts of Nature, then not beasts of their own making ; a fault too frequently objected to country Squires.
 However, the Latin is nobler, Ferae natura, Things unci- vilized, and free. Ferae, as the Critics say, being from the Hebrew, Pere, Afinus silvestris. SCRIBL.

Suppose I censure—you know what I mean—
To save a Bishop, may I name a Dean?

F. A Dean, Sir? no: his Fortune is not made,
You hurt a man that's rising in the Trade. 35

P. If not the Tradesman who set up to day,
Much less the 'Prentice who to morrow may.
Down, down, proud Satire! tho' a Realm be spoil'd, Arraign no mightier Thief than wretched Wild;
Or, if a Court or Country's made a job, 40
Go drench a Pick-pocket, and join the Mob.

But, Sir, I beg you (for the Love of Vice!)
The matter's weighty, pray consider twice;
Have you less pity for the needy Cheat,
The poor and friendless Villain, than the Great? 45
Alas! the small Discredit of a Bribe
Scarce hurts the Lawyer, but undoes the Scribe.
Then better sure it Charity becomes
To tax Directors, who (thank God) have Plums;

VER. 35. You hurt a man that's rising in the Trade.] For, as the reasonable De la Bruyere observes, "Qui ne sait être un ERASME, doit penser à être Evêque." SCRIBL.

VER. 39. wretched Wild,] Jonathan Wild, a famous Thief, and Thief-Impeacher, who was at last caught in his own train and hanged. P.

VER. 42. for the love of Vice!] We must consider the Poet as here directing his discourse to a follower of the new system of Politics, That private vices are public benefits. SCRIBL.

Still better, Ministers ; or, if the thing 50
 May pinch ev'n there—why lay it on a King.

F. Stop ! stop !

P. Must Satire, then, nor rise nor fall ?
 Speak out, and bid me blame no Rogues at all.

F. Yes, strike that Wild, I'll justify the blow.

P. Strike ? why the man was hang'd ten years ago :
 Who now that obsolete Example fears ? 56
 Ev'n Peter trembles only for his Ears.

F. What always Peter ? Peter thinks you mad,
 You make men desp'rate, if they once are bad :
 Else might he take to Virtue some years hence—

P. As S—k, if he lives, will love the PRINCE.

F. Strange spleen to S—k !

NOTES.

VER. 51. why lay it on a King.] He is serious in the foregoing subjects of satire ; but ironical here, and only alludes to the common practice of Ministers, in laying their own miscarriages on their masters.

VER. 55. Strike ? why the man was hang'd ten years ago :] The line is exquisite. The high humour of it, in the unexpected turn, is but it's second praise. It finely carries on the argument, and exposes the false rules and measures of satire, his Court Friend would inculcate for his practice : which insinuate, that he is to avoid the proper object of satire, great offenders, who have escaped public justice ; and, in their stead, to seize the little rogues, who have submitted to it.

VER. 57. Ev'n Peter trembles only for his Ears,] Peter had, the year before this, narrowly escaped the Pillory for forgery : and got off with a severe rebuke only from the bench.

P. Do I wrong the Man?

God knows, I praise a Courtier where I can.

When I confess, there is who feels for Fame, 64

VER. 64. feels for fame, And melts to Goodness,] This is a fine compliment; the expression shewing, that fame was but his second passion.

VER. 65. Scarb'row] Earl of, and Knight of the Garter, whose personal attachments to the king appeared from his steady adherence to the royal interest, after his resignation of his great employment of Master of the Horse; and whose known honour and virtue made him esteemed by all parties. P.

VER. 66. Esher's peaceful grove,] The house and gardens of Esher in Surry, belonging to the Honourable Mr. Pelham, Brother of the Duke of Newcastle. The author could not have given a more amiable idea of his Character than in comparing him to Mr. Craggs. P.

VER. 67. Kent and Nature] Means no more than art and nature. And in this consists the compliment to the Artist.

VER. 71. Secker is decent] These words (like those y 135. of the first Dialogue) are another instance of the malignity of the public judgment. The Poet thought, and not without reason, that they conveyed a very high idea of the worthy person to whom they are applied; to be DE-

Manners with Candour are to Benson giv'n,

I shun his Zenith, court his mild Decline ;
Thus SOMMERS once, and HALIFAX, were mine.

NOTES.

CENT (or to become every station of life in which a man is placed) being the noblest encomium on his wisdom and virtue. It is the very topic he employs in speaking of a favourite friend, one he most esteemed and loved,

Noble and young, who strikes the heart,
With ev'ry iprichtly, ev'ry DECENT part.

The word in both places implying every endowment of the heart. As in that celebrated verse of Horace, from whence the expression was taken, and which no one has a better right to apply to himself than this excellent prelate :

Quid verum atque DECENS curo et rogo, et omnis in hoc sum.

So that to be decent is to excell in the moral character.

VER. 74. But does the court a worthy Man remove ?] The poet means, remove him for his worth : not that he esteem'd the being in or out a proof either of corruption, or virtue. " I had a glympse of a letter of yours lately (says he " to Dr. Swift) by which I find you are, like the vulgar,
" apter to think well of people out of power, than of people
" in power. Perhaps 'tis a mistake ; but, however, there " is something in it generous." Lett. xvii. Sept. 3, 1726.

VER. 77. Sommers] John Lord Sommers died in 1716. He had been Lord Keeper in the reign of William III. who took from him the seals in 1700. The author had the honour of knowing him in 1706. A faithful, able, and incorrupt minister ; who, to the qualities of a consummate statesman, added those of a man of Learning and Politeness.

cellor of the Exchequer under Queen Anne, made early a considerable figure; but since a much greater both by his ability and eloquence, joined with the utmost judgment and temper. P.

VER. 92. And if yet higher, &c.] He was at that time honoured with the esteem and favour of his Royal Highness the Prince.

VER. 93. Still let me say! no Follower, but a Friend.] i. e. Unrelated to their parties, and attached only to their persons.

VER. 99. my Lord May'r] Sir John Barnard, Lord Mayor in the year of the Poem, 1738. A Citizen eminent for his virtue, public Spirit, and great talents in Parliament. An excellent Man, Magistrate, and Senator. In the year 1747, the City of London, in memory of his many and signal services to his Country, erected a Statue to him. But his image had been placed long before in the heart of every good Man.

To find an honest man I beat about,
And love him, court him, praise him, in or out.

F. Then why so few commended ?

P. Not so fierce ;

Find you the Virtue, and I'll find the Verse. 105

But random Praise—the task can ne'er be done ;

Each Mother asks it for her booby Son,

Each Widow asks it for the Best of Men,

For him she weeps, and him she weds agen.

Praise cannot stoop, like Satire, to the ground ; 110

The Number may be hang'd, but not be crown'd.

Enough for half the Greatest of these days,

To 'scape my Censure, not expect my Praise.

Are they not rich ? what more can they pretend ?

Dare they to hope a Poet for their Friend ? 115

What RICHLIEU wanted, LOUIS scarce could gain,

And what young AMMON wish'd, but wish'd in vain.

NOTES.

VER. 102. To find an honest man, &c.] In this search, in which he was very sincere, it would have been well if he had not sometimes trusted to the reports of others, who had less penetration, but more passions to gratify.

VER. 116. What Richlieu wanted, &c.] The thing here insinuated is, that the greatest character for Politics, Munificence, or Conquests, when separate from virtue, would never gain the praises of the true Poet. But munificence approaching nearer to Virtue than the other two qualities, he says, Louis scarce could gain ; while Richlieu and young Ammon went without.

Ibid. Louis scarce could gain,] By this expression finely

No Pow'r the Muse's Friendship can command ;
 No Pow'r when Virtue claims it, can withstand :
 To Cato, Virgil pay'd one honest line ; 120

O let my Country's Friends illumin mine !
 —What are you thinking? F. Faith the thought's no sin,

I think your Friends are out, and would be in.

P. If merely to come in, Sir, they go out,
 The way they take is strangely round about. 125

F. They too may be corrupted, you'll allow?

P. I only call those Knaves who are so now.

Is that too little? Come then, I'll comply—
 Spirit of Arnall! aid me while I lie.

NOTES.

insinuating, that the great Boileau always falls below himself in those passages where he flatters his Master. Of which flattery he gives an instance in ŷ 231. where the topic of adulation is exceeding childish and extravagant.

VER. 120. To Cato, Virgil pay'd one honest line.] It is in the ÆN.

His dantem jura Catonem.

Ibid. Virgil paid one honest line,] i. e. If Virgil, who was a Courtier, paid one honest line, how many are due from me, who am none?

VER. 121. O let my Country's Friend illumin mine!] A pretty expression, alluding to the old practice of illuminating MSS. with gold and vermilion.

VER. 127. I only call those Knaves who are so now.] He left it to Time to tell them, not the Cato of Virgil, but the Cato of Mr. Pope. See the Ep. on Riches.

Cato is as great a Rogue as you.

 Has never made a Friend in private life,
 And was, besides, a Tyrant to his Wife. 135

But pray, when others praise him, do I blame?
 Call Verres, Wolfey, any odious name?
 Why rail they then, if but a Wreath of mine,
 Oh All-accomplish'd ST. JOHN! deck thy shrine?
 What? shall each spurgall'd Hackney of the day, 140
 When Paxton gives him double Pots and Pay,
 Or each new-pension'd Sycophant, pretend and under discipline, what must we think of their disorders since they were disbanded and become free-booters? No virtue nor merit hath escaped them. They have made a great City in the South, too much resemble another in the North, where the products of night and darkness are discharged from Garrets on every honest man that comes within their reach.

VER. 160. the Bard] A verse taken out of a poem to Sir R. W. P.

And how did, pray, the florid Youth offend,
Whose Speech you took, and gave it to a Friend?

P. Faith it imports not much from whom it came;
Whoever borrow'd, could not be to blame,
Since the whole House did afterwards the same.
Let Courtly Wits to Wits afford supply, 57½
As Hog to Hog in huts of Westphaly;
If one, thro' Nature's Bounty or his Lord's,
Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
From him the next receives it, thick or thin, 175
As pure a mess almost as it came in;
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind;
From tail to mouth, they feed and they carouse:
The last full fairly gives it to the House. 180

F. This filthy simile, this beastly line
Quite turns my stomach —

P. So does Flatt'ry mine;
And all your courtly Civet-cats can vent,
Perfume to you, to me is Excrement.
But hear me further—Japhet, 'tis agreed, 185

NOTES.

VER. 164. The Priest, &c.] Spoken not of any particular priest, but of many priests. P.

 But Pens can forge, my Friend, that cannot write ;
 And must no Egg in Japhet's face be thrown,

 Must never Patriot then declaim at Gin,
 Unless, good man ! he has been fairly in !
 No zealous Pastor blame a failing Spouse, !
 Without a staring Reason on his brows ?
 And each Blasphemer quite escapè the rod, 195
 Because the insult's not on Man, but God ?
 Ask you what Provocation I have had ?
 The strong Antipathy of Good to Bad.
 When Truth or Virtue an Affront endures,
 Th' Affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours.

 Yes, I am proud ; I must be proud to see
 Men not afraid of God, afraid of me :
 Safe from the Bar, the Pulpit, and the Throne, 210
 Yet touch'd and sham'd by Ridicule alone.

O sacred weapon ! left for Truth's defence,
 Sole Dread of Folly, Vice, and Insolence !
 To all but Heav'n-directed hands deny'd,
 The Muse may give thee, but the Gods must guide :

NOTES.

VER. 208. Yes, I am proud; &c.] In this ironical exultation the Poet insinuates a subject of the deepest humiliation.

VER. 211. Yet touch'd and sham'd by Ridicule alone.] The Passions are given us to awake and support Virtue. But they frequently betray their trust, and go over to the interests of Vice. Ridicule, when employed in the cause of Virtue, shames and brings them back to their duty. Hence the use and importance of Satire.

VER. 214. To all but Heaven-directed hands] “ The Citizen (says Plato, in his fifth book of Laws) who does “ no injury to any one, without question, merits our “ esteem. He, who, not content with being barely just “ himself, opposes the course of injustice, by prosecuting “ it before the Magistrate, merits our esteem vastly more. “ The first discharges the duty of a single Citizen; but “ the other does the office of a Body. But he whose zeal “ stops not here, but proceeds to ASSIST THE MAGIS- “ TRATE IN PUNISHING is the most valuable blessing of “ Society. This is the PERFECT CITIZEN, to whom we “ should adjudge the prize of Virtue.”

And goad the Prelate slumb'ring in his Stall.

That counts your Beauties only by your Stains,

NOTES.

VER. 219. And goad the Prelate slumb'ring in his Stall.] The good Ensebius, in his Evangelical Preparation, draws a long parallel between the Ox and the Christian Priesthood. Hence the dignified Clergy, out of mere humility, have ever since called their thrones by the name of stalls. To which a great Prelate of Winchester, one W. Edinton, modestly alluding (who otherwise had been long since forgotten) has rendered his name immortal by this ecclesiastical aphorism, Canterbury is the higher rack, but Winchester is the better manger. By which, however, it appears that he was not one of those here condemned, who slumber in their stalls.

SCRIBL.

VER. 220, &c. Ye tinsel Insects ! whom a Court maintains, That counts your Beauties only by your Stains, Spin all your Cobwebs] And again, to the same purpose, in the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot,

Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel ?

This painted child of Dirt, that stinks and stings.

These, it is objected, are Insects not of Nature's creating, but the Poet's, and therefore such compound images are to be condemned. One would think, by this, that mixed qualities troubled the sense, as much as mixed metaphors do the style. But whoever thinks so, is mistaken. The fault of mixed metaphors is, that they call the imagination from image to image, when it is the writer's purpose to fix it upon one. On the contrary, mixed qualities do their office rightly, and inform the understanding of what the author would insinuate, that the moral insect is a more worthless creature than the physical, as he collects together, in one individual, divers bad or trifling qualities, which nature had dispersed in many. And when, in fact, we see them so collected ; as venom, sophistry, and insidiousness, in a Court-Butterfly, the giving it the bite of the bug, and the web of the spider, makes it a monster indeed, but a monster of nature's producing, and not the poet's, Fingentur species.

VER. 220. Ye Insects—The Muse's wing shall brush you all away :] This it did very effectually ; and the memory of them had been now forgotten, had not the Poet's charity, for a while, protracted their miserable Being. There is now in his library a complete collection of all the horrid Libels written and published against him ;

The tale reviv'd, the lye so oft o'erthrown,
 Th' imputed trash, and dulness not his own ;
 The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
 The libell'd Person, and the pictur'd shape.

These he had bound up in several volumes, according to their various sizes, from folios down to duodecimos ; and to each of them hath affixed this motto out of the book of Job :

NOTES.

VER. ult.] This was the last poem of the kind printed by our author, with a resolution to publish no more ; but to enter thus, in the most plain and solemn manner he could, a sort of PROTEST against that insuperable corruption and depravity of manners, which he had been so unhappy as to live to see. Could he have hoped to have amended any, he had continued those attacks ; but bad men were grown so shameless and so powerful, that Ridicule was become as unsafe as it was ineffectual. The Poem raised him, as he knew it would, some enemies ; but he had reason to be satisfied with the approbation of good men and the testimony of his own conscience. P.

O N

Receiving from the Right Hon. the Lady

FRANCES SHIRLEY

A STANDISH and TWO PENS.

YES, I beheld th' Athenian Queen
Descend in all her sober charms;

“ And take (she said, and smil'd serene)

“ Take at this hand celestial arms :

“ Secure the radiant weapons wield;

“ This golden lance shall guard Desert,

“ And if a Vice dares keep the field,

“ This steel shall stab it to the heart.”

Aw'd, on my bended knees I fell,

Receiv'd the weapons of the sky;

And dipt them in the sable Well,

The fount of Fame or Infamy.

NOTES.

The Lady Frances Shirley] A Lady whose great Merit Mr. Pope took a real pleasure in celebrating.

- “ What Well? what Weapon? (Flavia cries)
“ A standish, steel and golden pen!
“ It came from Bertrand’s <sup>a</sup>, not the skies;
“ I gave it you to write again.
“ But, Friend, take heed whom you attack;
“ You’ll bring a House (I mean of Peers)
“ Red, Blue, and Green, nay, white and black,
“ L—— and all about your ears.
“ You’d write as smooth again on glass,
“ And run, on ivory, so glib,
“ As not to stick at fool or ass <sup>b</sup>,
“ Nor stop at Flattery or Fib <sup>c</sup>.
“ Athenian Queen! and sober charms!
“ I tell ye, fool, there’s nothing in’t:
“ ’Tis Venus, Venus gives these arms <sup>d</sup>;
“ In Dryden’s Virgil see the print <sup>e</sup>.

- “ Come, if you'll be a quiet soul,
“ That dares tell neither Truth nor Lies †,
“ I'll list you in the harmless roll
“ Of those that sing of these poor eyes.”

NOTES.

† i. e. If you have neither the courage to write Satire, nor the application to attempt an Epic poem.—He was then meditating on such a work.
